2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 120*)—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

A deed provided that it was expressly understood by the parties that the grantor should within five years from the date thereof go to grantee, and ascertain whether he was satisfied with the transaction, and, if not satisfied, the grantor should pay him the amount received for the land, and grantee should reconvey the land to grantor, and, if grantor failed or refused to pay such amount to grantee, he agreed to convey to grantee another tract in addition to the tract herein conveyed. Held that, if grantee, when approached on the subject within five years from the date of the deed, declared that he was not satisfied with the transaction, grantor was entitled to a reconveyance upon paying grantee the price paid for the land.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 120*)—PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS—TIME OF PERFORMANCE.

Where a deed provided that grantor should within five years after date ascertain from grantee whether he was satisfied with the transaction, and, if he was not, grantor should pay him the price of the land, and grantee should reconvey, grantor was entitled to a reasonable time before the expiration of such five years to raise the money to perform his part of the contract, and seven days before the expiration of such period was a reasonable time, so that he could ascertain grantee's wishes seven days before that time in absence of objection at the time that the full five years had not expired.

Where, pursuant to a deed which provided that grantor should ascertain five years after the date of the deed whether grantee was satisfied with the transaction, and, if not, should refund the price, return and receive a reconveyance, grantee stated that he was dissatisfied when questioned on the subject seven days before the expiration of the five years, when grantor went to some expense and trouble in raising the money to pay for a reconveyance, grantee could not afterwards change his mind and refuse to reconvey on the ground that grantor did not wait until the exact expiration of the five-year period.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Page County.

Suit by David F. Burner against William E. Burner. From a decree dismissing the bill, complainant appeals. Reversed.

M. L. Walton, of Woodstock, and R. S. Parks, of Luray, for appellant. Leedy & Berry, of Luray, for appellee.

CARDWELL, J. David F. Burner, appellant, and William E. Burner, appellee, are brothers, and in April, 1907, were coterminous landowners in the Massanutton section of Page county, Va. In the early part of 1907 appellant was desirous of obtaining a loan of $1,500 to meet certain business engagements, and had arranged for this loan from one Ashby Fultz, to be secured by deed of trust on a certain 14-acre tract of land adjoining the lands of himself and appellee. About four days after the arrangement agreed on with Fultz, but before it was consummated, appellant had a talk with appellee, telling him of the arrangement with Fultz and in that connection appellee suggested to appellant that it might be well for him (appellee) to borrow the money of Fultz, in which event he would loan it to appellant, and have him execute a deed to appellee for the 14 acres of land, upon terms and stipulations mutually agreed upon. The change in the transaction proposed by appellee was more desirable to appellant, as he states, first, because he would be borrowing the money direct from his brother rather than from Fultz, who was of no kin, and, second, because under the stipulations agreed on with his brother he (appellant) would have no interest to pay on the loan, as the brother was to take immediate possession of the land, and crop the same, which crops, it was considered, by reason of the quality of the land, upon proper cultivation, would afford ample compensation for the loan in lieu of the regular payment of interest that appellant would have been compelled to pay Fultz in the event that the loan was made by him.

Appellee borrowed the $1,500 of Fultz, and turned the same over to appellant, who contemporaneously—that is, on April 20, 1907—executed the deed out of which this litigation arises, conveying to appellee, in consideration of the sum of $1,500 cash in hand paid, and with covenants of general warranty of title, the said 14 acres of land, describing the same as to locality and boundaries, and stating sources of title, etc.; but said deed contains the following conditions and stipulations:

"It is expressly understood and agreed to by the parties to this conveyance that the said D. F. Burner shall within five years from the date of this deed go to Wm. E. Burner, and ascertain from him whether he is satisfied with this transaction or not. It the said Wm. E. Burner is not satisfied with the said transaction, then the said D. F. Burner shall pay him the sum of $1,600 in cash, and the said Wm. E. Burner shall reconvey the land herein conveyed to the said D. F. Burner. If the said D. F. Burner shall fail or refuse to pay to the said Wm. E. Burner the said sum of $1,600, then the said D. F. Burner agrees and binds himself to convey to said Wm. E. Burner another tract of land, containing 16 acres of upper land now owned by him, in addition to the tract herein conveyed. If the said D. F. Burner shall sell the said 16-acre tract of land within the next five years, he shall not sell it for less than $500, and shall pay over the proceeds thereof to the said Wm. E. Burner when sold."

There are other conditions specifically set forth in the deed which required appellee to fence and farm the land properly, and trim the apple trees, and to observe the rotation of crops, especially as to corn.

Said deed was promptly recorded, and appellee immediately took full possession of the land, and has ever since enjoyed all the benefits derived therefrom. It will be observed that not only was said conveyance of the 14 acres of land conditional, but expressly stipulated that within five years from its date the grantor (appellant) should have the right to redeem the land and secure a reconveyance thereof to him from appellee, provided he went in person "within five years from the date of this deed (April 20, 1907) to appellee, and ascertained from him whether he was satisfied with the transaction or not, and, in the event that appellee expressed himself not satisfied with the transaction, then appellant was to pay appellee $1,600 in cash ($100 of which was to be a bonus), and upon the receipt of which appellee was required to reconvey the land to appellant.

Appellant, being desirous and determined to secure a reconveyance of said land to him within the five years, provided he could raise the sum of $1,600, which was necessary to accomplish this purpose, went to see appellee at his home on the 13th day of April, 1912, which was within five years from the date of the said deed, and within only seven days before the expiration of the said five years, and informed him as to the object of his visit, and propounded to appellee the question indicated in said deed, "whether he was satisfied with the transaction," and in reply appellee stated specifically, and without qualification or evasion, that "he had the same opinion with reference to the transaction that he had in the first place, and told appellant to get his money ready," meaning, unquestionably, the $1,600 which it was necessary for appellant to raise in order to secure a reconveyance of the land to him, and within a few days after this appellant raised the $1,600 by a loan from a bank at Luray, and carried it to the office of appellee's attorneys, where he was present, and proposed to turn over the $1,600 to him upon his reconveyance of said land to appellant; but appellee, though not denying at any time that he had expressed himself as not "satisfied with the transaction," and told appellant to get his money ready, refused to receive the money and to execute a reconveyance of the land to appellant, stating at no time any reason for his refusal, except, "I have changed my mind, and intend to keep the land." Whereupon, appellant filed his bill in this cause, setting up the facts above recited and other facts as to the transaction between himself and his brother, appellee, and praying that the latter be required to specifically perform his contract with appellant touching the said land in strict conformity with the terms of their contract evidenced by said deed of April 20, 1907.

Upon the hearing of the cause upon the bill, the answer of appellee thereto, and depositions taken on behalf of the respective parties, the learned judge of the circuit court entered the decree, which is brought under review in this appeal, denying the relief prayed for in the bill, and dismissed the same, with costs to appellee.

Appellee, in his answer to the bill, while not specifically denying its allegations, takes the position that the conveyance of the 14 acres of land was a conveyance of an absolute title to the land to him, and in no sense intended as a security for the loan of the $1,500 to the appellant, contending that by the terms of the deed a privilege was reserved to him of reconveying the land at the end of five years, and demanding the repayment to him of the purchase money; "but this privilege was accorded to him, and was left entirely to his discretion under the terms of said deed." His answer further states the position of appellee to be that he was not obliged to exercise his discretion as to whether he would keep the land or reconvey it to appellant until the end of the five years. He admits that the appellant came to him a few days before the expiration of the five-year period, and asked him what he was going to do about it (the land transaction), to which inquiry he then and there replied, "I am about of the same opinion that I was when the transaction was had; get your money ready." "Intending further to tell him (while he was under no obligation to do so at that time) that he was satisfied, and did not expect to reconvey the land, unless some serious accident happened to the land between that time and the expiration of the said period of five years, such as a flood; but the said plaintiff immediately left, seemed to get in a tremendous hurry, and did not give your respondent time to say anything in explanation of his jesting remark."

It appears from the evidence that this 14 acres of land was liable to overflow when there was a freshet in the Shenandoah river, which might result in carrying off the fertile soil on the land, rendering it of little or no value, and the view taken by appellee apparently is that his brother, the appellant, had no rights under the terms of the deed, but he (appellee) could, up to the last moment of the five years, in case the land by reason of a flood or from any other cause became of less value or of no value at all, declare his dissatisfaction as to the transaction, and throw the land back on appellant. As to the statement that appellant was in such a hurry on April 13, 1912, that he (appellee) did not have time to explain "his jesting remark," appellant, when testifying in this cause, after stating that he had heard from several sources that his brother was dissatisfied with the land transaction, stated: "I was to go to him within five years and ascertain the question whether or not he was satisfied, and, if he was satisfied, it would make a clear deed, and, if he wasn't satisfied, and throwed the piece of land upon me, that I was to go and raise the $1,600, and pay it to him. I did so on the 13th day of April, 1912. When I went to him, I says, 'Willie, I have come to ascertain the question whether or not you are satisfied with the transaction of this land.' He says, 'I have the same opinion that I had when we made the deal.' I says, then, I says, 'Willie, then you have throwed that land upon me?' and he says, 'Yes, sir.' 'Well,' I says, 'then that settles it.' I waited about two minutes; I started right back by Willie Burner, and I says, 'Now, Willie, I am going to see whether or not I can raise this money, and, if I can't raise this money, I will come back to you in two or three days from now, and go and give you a clean deed for the 16 acres of land that I have mentioned in the deed. * * *' On the 16th day of April, 1912, I went down by my brother Willie E. Burner's house, and asked where he was, and he was over to the barn fixing to come to town. I went down to the barn, and told Willie Burner that I had the money ready to pay him the $1,600 cash that I agreed to, and I wanted him to come to Luray, and make me a deed for the piece of land back. He says, 'I have studied over the matter, and I have agreed to hold it.'

Appellant further states that he then went to the bank in Luray, got the $1,600, and, in company with one of his neighbors (who testified in this cause), went at once to the office of appellee's attorneys, where he met appellee, and said to him, "Willie, I have the $1,600 here and to count the $1,600 due you according to contract that I have with you; will you receive it?" and he said, "No, sir."

Two witnesses testifying for appellant prove that appellee, before the 13th of April, 1912, had on two separate occasions declared that he was not satisfied with the transaction had with appellant with respect to the land in question, and intended "to throw it up." J. Daniel Burner, a brother of appellant and appellee, testifies that on the same day, April 13, 1912, and after appellant had been to the home of appellee, witness saw the latter, and had a conversation with him about this land matter to the following effect: "Now state what that conversation was you had with him there and then. A. Well, I went to him, and told him that I had heard he had throwed up the land on David, and he said, 'Yes, sir.' I said, 'I think it was one of the worst day's work you have done.' He asked me what my authority was, and I told him that different men were waiting to get the land, and I was sorry to see anybody else get it. Q. Did William Burner tell you out plainly that he had thrown the land up, and was not going to keep it, and had so told brother David? A. He just told me that he had thrown it up, and that was all he said when I asked him."

[1] The whole defense of appellee to this suit rests upon his contention that he was actually entitled to hold said land for five years from the date of the deed, and in the meantime was not compelled to say whether he was satisfied or not, although that question was asked him by appellant. The fact that he did speak and exercise his right of option reserved to him in the deed when approached on the subject April 13, 1912, is wholly inconsistent with the contention he is now making. He doubtless might have said, and with propriety and reason, to appellant, "I have till the last day of the five-year limit to say whether I am dissatisfied and prefer to give up the land according to the terms of the deed," which privilege he did not exercise, but instead, as he admits, replied, "I am about of the same opinion that I was when the transaction was had; get your money ready," clearly meaning that he was dissatisfied, and intended to reconvey the land to appellant, and get the $1,600 stipulated for in the deed.

[2] Whether the change of appellee's mind is due to not realizing an expectation that appellant could not raise the $1,600, in which event he would be entitled to a conveyance of the additional 16 acres of land, or to information that had come to him that the 14 acres was worth more than the $1,600, as the evidence in this cause clearly proves, is immaterial. The deed in question was doubtless written by a layman, and the terms of the agreement it purported to set out are not very clearly stated; but from a reading of the whole deed it is to be ascertained that it reserved to the grantor (appellant) certain rights in the land conveyed, including an option to take a reconveyance of the land to himself upon his paying to the grantee (appellee) $1,600, provided that appellee, when approached on the subject within five years from the date of the deed, declared that he was not satisfied with the transaction recited therein.

[3, 4] It seems to us entirely reasonable that appellant went to appellee several days before the expiration of the five years to ascertain from him whether or not he was satisfied, for, if he declared himself dissatisfied, and proposed to "throw up" the land upon appellant, the latter was entitled to a reasonable time to raise the necessary money to perform his part of the contract, and the time he gave himself to accomplish that purpose was, we think, entirely reasonable. When appellee answered the question put to him by appellant on April 13, 1912, as he did, it was clearly the right of appellant, reserved to him by the terms of the deed, to then and there exercise his option to pay appellee the $1,600, and call for a reconveyance of the 14 acres of land to him. By the deed of the 14 acres of land to appellee, it was made the imperative duty of appellant to go to him within five years, and ask him if he was satisfied with this land transaction, and, this having been done within a reasonable time before the expiration of the time limit, and appellee having declared himself dissatisfied, and after appellant had, at some expense and trouble, raised the necessary money for him to carry out his option to take the land back, it would be unjust and contrary to equity and good conscience to permit appellee to change his mind, and refuse to reconvey the land to appellant.

We are therefore of opinion to reverse the decree appealed from, and to remand the cause for further proceedings to be had therein in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Reversed.

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 65*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE.

The doctrine of contributory negligence implies the existence of negligence.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 286*)—QUESTION FOR JURY—MASTER'S NEGLIGENCE—UNSAFE PLACE TO WORK.

On evidence in an action for injuries to a servant resulting in death, held, that the question of defendant's negligence in exposing deceased to risks different from those incident to his employment and for which he was unfitted because of his lack of experience was for the jury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 230*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

The fact that, after the father of a minor consented to his employment on the understanding that he should not do work of a dangerous character, the master assigned him to dangerous work would not estop the master from setting up the defense of contributory negligence to defeat a recovery.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action for injuries to a servant resulting in death, where it appeared that the east side of a track where he was killed was a dangerous place in which to put an inexperienced minor to work, that the west side was reasonably safe, and that he had been warned not to work on the east side, the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 240*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS PLACE.

Where there was no chock under the wheel of a car on a siding next to an embankment on the premises of a lime company and a servant gave a signal to move the car and walked across the track to the other side next to the embankment, where there was no necessity for his going and such position was the proximate cause of his injury, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law and could not recover.

6. TRIAL (§ 243*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INCONSISTENCY.

7. NEGLIGENCE (§ 98*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE.

Error to Circuit Court, Shenandoah County. Action by Affleck's Administrator against the Powhatan Lime Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings writ of error. Reversed.

Marshall McCormick, of Berryville, P. E. O. Cabell, of Richmond, and M. L. Walter, of Woodstock, for plaintiff in error. Tavenner & Bauserman, of Woodstock, and C. E. Guyer, of Strasburg, for defendant in error.

KEITH, P. In this suit Affleck's administrator recovered a judgment against the Powhatan Lime Company, which is before us upon a writ of error.

The Powhatan Lime Company is a Virginia corporation, engaged in the quarrying of rock and in the manufacture of it into lime and marketing the same. It employs a number of servants, and one of its departments provides for the nailing of barrels. The declaration alleges that in the conduct of its business it uses complicated machinery and requires the performance of duties as the part of its employes, some of which are in their nature dangerous; that as a part of its enterprise the defendant requires its employes to move cars over its track from place to place preparatory to loading the same with lime for shipment, these cars being frequently moved down an incline on a spur track, and while they rested upon this track were held in place by tightening the brakes and by a scotch or wedge placed under the lower wheel of the car, and, when it was necessary to move the car, the brakes were of course loosened and the scotch or wedge taken out.

The declaration further avers that William L. Affleck, who was a minor, was employed by the limestone company with the consent of his father to labor at the work of nailing barrels and to do other like work ot of a more dangerous character; that affleck was a boy 16 years of age, of small tature, and wanting in strength, experience, nd capacity; that defendant assigned this ifant to work, the dangers of which he 'as incapable of comprehending and avoid-ig, without any instruction as to the man-er in which the same was to be performed nd the dangers incident thereto guarded gainst.

On behalf of the defendant the facts now aterial to be considered are that at the lace of the accident the tracks ran north nd south, and on the right-hand side of the rack there was a bank or cut about six or even feet in depth; that a car projecting ver the track would leave a space of only ix or seven inches between the car and the ank; that owing to this condition it was angerous to work upon the east side of the rack, and there is evidence tending to prove hat the defendant instructed the plaintiff's ntestate not to go upon the east, side of he track at all but to perform his duties upon the west side, which there is evidence ending to show was a reasonably safe placé. The plaintiff's intestate disregarded this in-struction, went upon the east side of the rack, and, as the plaintiff in error contends, hus became the author of his own injury.

There were a number of exceptions taken luring the progress of the trial to the ad-ission of evidence, but we find no error in he rulings of the court with respect to them, nd none of them presents any question of ufficient interest or importance to require urther consideration. A number of instruc-ions were offered, some of which were giv-n and others refused, but in the main we hink the rulings of the court with respect to hese instructions were correct, and the in-structions given were quite sufficient to en-able the jury intelligently to consider the ev-idence, except with respect to two instruc-ions which deal with the defense of con-tributory negligence, one of which was given at the instance of the defendant in error and he other at the instance of the plaintiff in error.

[1, 2] The doctrine of contributory negli-gence implies the existence of negligence. We are of opinion that the evidence tends to prove negligence on the part of the plain-tiff in error. There is evidence which tends to show that the boy who was killed was only 16 years of age, a country lad, inexperi-enced in the use of machinery, mentally and physically undeveloped, and of small stature. There is proof that his father, in view of these facts, was careful to inform the plain-tiff in error, and to make it a condition of the boy's employment, that he should not be placed in positions of danger; the father stating at the time that he did not care for him to go about machinery, as he never had had any experience. The result was an un-derstanding with the plaintiff in error that he was to be employed in the barrel department in nailing barrels or, if there was no regular work in that department, to pick up lime or unload coal.

From the facts we have stated, we think the jury might have fairly inferred that the defendant company had been guilty of negli-gence in exposing the boy to risks different from those incident to his contract of em-ployment, in the performance of duties for which he was unfitted by reason of lack of experience and skill.

[3] The contention of the defendant in er-ror is that, by reason of the contract of em-ployment and its breach, the plaintiff in er-ror was estopped to make the defense of con-tributory negligence; but in this view we cannot concur. Although the plaintiff in er-ror may have been guilty of negligence, yet, if the contributory negligence of the de-fendant in error's intestate contributed to the injury, he cannot recover. As we have said, contributory negligence on the part of the person injured always implies negligence on the part of the person causing the injury.

In Labatt on Master and Servant, p. 3902, § 1387, the doctrine for which defendant in error contends is thus stated:

"It is said that the master's order to a serv-ant to do work outside the scope of his origi-nal employment operates as an implied assur-ance that the new duties may be performed without incurring any abnormal risks. Un-der this theory it would seem that the master is virtually converted, for the time being, into a guarantor of the servant's safety. Upon the assumption that this is the effect of the Indiana decisions, they have been condemn-ed in Alabama.

"The disapproval thus expressed is, in the opinion of the present writer, well founded. There is no valid ground for departing in this instance from the general principle dis-cussed in chapter LXXX, ante [which deals with knowledge as an element of the mas-ter's liability]. It should be observed, how-ever, that the effect of the sweeping lan-guage used by the Indiana courts is consid-erably qualified by the fact that the defense of an assumption of the risks is conceded to be a bar to the action if the evidence shows that those risks were, as a matter of fact, appreciated." See Brazil Block Co. v. Hood-let, 129 Ind. 327, 27 N. E. 741; Mary Lee Coal & R. Co. v. Chambers, 97 Ala. 171, 11 South. 897.

[4] This brings us to the defense of con-tributory negligence. There is evidence, as we have already said, which tends to show that the east side of the track was a danger-ous place in which to put an inexperienced youth to work. The west side of the track, however, the evidence tends to prove, was one of reasonable safety, and plaintiff's intestate was warned not to work upon the east side but upon the west side only. At the instance of the defendant in error the court instructed the jury that: "Contributory negligence on the part of the decedent is such negligence as contributes directly to and is the proximate cause of the accident or injury complained of, and that, if the defendant relies upon the defense of contributory negligence upon the part of the decedent, the burden of proof of such contributory negligence rests upon the said defendant, unless the contributory negligence appears from the plaintiff's own evidence, in which case the burden shifts."

[5] On behalf of the plaintiff in error the court instructed the jury that: "If it believes from the evidence that there was no chock under the wheel of the car next to the embankment, and that the plaintiff's intestate did give the signal to Funkhouser to move the car, walked across the track to the other side next to the embankment, when there was no necessity for his so doing, and this was the proximate cause of his injury, if the jury so believes, then this was contributory negligence, as a matter of law, and the plaintiff cannot recover. Such conduct need not have been the sole cause of his injury, but, if it contributed to his injury and subsequent death, this is sufficient and the verdict should be for the defendant."

[6] These two instructions are irreconcilable. The instruction asked for and given at the instance of the plaintiff in error is in accordance with numerous decisions of this court, while that given on behalf of the defendant in error is wholly at variance with it. We have held in numerous cases that, where such is the case, it would be impossible to say by which the jury was controlled, and it constitutes reversible error.

In Richmond Traction Co. v. Hildebrand, incorrectly reported in 98 Va. 22,<sup>1</sup> the court dealing with this subject uses the following language:

"The instruction now under consideration is, however, not merely defective but an entirely incorrect statement of the law well calculated to mislead the jury. The two instructions are inconsistent with or contradictory to each other, and it is impossible to say whether the jury was controlled by the good or the bad in reaching their conclusion.

"In Thompson on Trials, vol. 2, § 2326, it is said: 'The giving of instructions which are inconsistent with or contradictory to each other is error, for the reason that the jury will be as likely to follow the good as the bad, and it cannot be known which they have followed, and which way soever they go, if there is an appeal or writ of error, the judgment must be reversed. Therefore an erroneous instruction is not cured by another instruction on the same subject which is correct, unless the former is by the latter specifically withdrawn.'" See this case as reported in 99 Va. 48, 84 S. E. 888.

The same doctrine is maintained in O. & O. Ry. Co. v. Whitlow, 104 Va. 90, 51 S. E.

182, where it is said: "Where contradictory instructions on a material point in a case have been given, the verdict of the jury should be set aside as it cannot be said whether the jury were controlled by the one or the other."

And so in the case of Southern Ry. Co. v. Hansbrough, 107 Va. 733, 60 S. E. 58: "If contradictory instructions on a material point in the case have been given, the verdict" of the jury "should be set aside, as it cannot be known by which the jury were controlled."

The same doctrine is stated in Va. & N. C. Wheel Co. v. Chalkley, 98 Va. 62, 34 S. E. 976; N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Mann, 99 Va. 180, 37 S. E. 849; Richmond Pass. & Power Co. v. Steger, 101 Va. 319, 43 S. E. 612.

[7] That the instruction given at the instance of the defendant in error does not correctly propound the law of contributory negligence as established appears from the following decisions:

In N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Cromer, 99 Va. 763, 40 S. E. 54, the law is thus stated: "It is not necessary to the defense of contributory negligence to show that but for it the accident would not have occurred. It is enough to show that the negligence of the plaintiff contributed to the injury. The question to be determined is not whether the plaintiff's negligence caused but whether it contributed to the injury of which he complains."

The position of this court is well stated in Richmond Traction Co. v. Martin, 102 Va. 209, 45 S. E. 886: "The well-known rule in this class of cases is that a plaintiff seeking to recover damages for an injury caused by the negligence of the defendant must himself be free from negligence, and, if it appears that his negligence has contributed as an efficient cause to the injury of which he complains, the court will not undertake to balance the negligence of the respective parties for the purpose of determining which was most at fault. The law recognizes no gradations of fault in such case, and where both parties have been guilty of negligence, as a general rule, there can be no recovery. There is really no distinction between negligence in the plaintiff and negligence in the defendant, except that the negligence of the former is called 'contributory negligence.'"

Upon the whole case, our conclusion is that, while there is evidence tending to show negligence upon the part of plaintiff in error, there is also evidence tending to show contributory negligence upon the part of defendant in error's intestate; that, in submitting the case to the jury upon the defense of contributory negligence, the court erred in giving to the jury inconsistent instructions; that the instruction given at the instance of the defendant in error cannot be reconciled with the numerous decisions of this court dealing with this subject, while the instruction asked for and given at the instance of plaintiff in error is a correct exposition of the law.

For this error we are constrained to reverse the case and remand it to the circuit court for a new trial to be had in accordance with the views herein expressed.

STARKE v. STORM'S EX'R.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 20, 1913.)

1. EQUITY (§ 271*)—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—SUBJECT-MATTER.

Where the matter of amendment to a bill is similar to that contained in a bill and was either known to complainant or might well have been known to him prior to the argument of the demurrer to his original bill, but was not brought forward until the demurrer was sustained on a ground involving dismissal of the bill, the court properly refused to allow it to be filed.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 1*)—CREATION OF RELATION—IMPLIED CONTRACT.

Where plaintiff at the age of 18 applied for the position of servant to deceased, who accepted him, and took him into his home and furnished him with shelter, food, and clothing, in return for small personal services, but there was no contract, express or implied, to pay plaintiff any money consideration for his services, no other relation than that of master and servant existed between the parties.

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 6*)—"GUARDIAN DE FACTO"—"GUARDIAN DE SON TORT."

In such case, where the master did not take possession of any property belonging to the infant servant or agree to pay any wages for his services, the master did not become a "guardian de facto or de son tort," who is purely a creature of a court of equity and is one who takes possession of an infant's property without right or lawful authority and is required to account therefor.

8. EQUITY (§ 48*)—GROUNDS OF DEFENSE—REMEDY AT LAW.

Where an infant servant, after leaving the master's service, returned at the request of the master, who promised to pay him $400 a year, any wages due the complainant for such services were recoverable by action at law, so that he could not file a bill asking that a court of equity award him such amount.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Albemarle County.

Bill by W. F. Starke against Edward H. Storm's executor. From a decree dismissing the bill, complainant appeals. Affirmed.

Gilmer & Gilmer, of Charlottesville, for appellant. Hanckel & Hanckel and Perkins & Perkins, all of Charlottesville, for appellee.

HARRISON, J. In January, 1911, one year after the death of Edward H. Storm, and about four years after the cause of action, if any, arose, W. F. Starke filed this bill asking that a court of equity award him a decree against the estate of Edward H. Storm for the sum of $6,736.84. Of this amount $1,736.84 was alleged to be for services rendered by the complainant to the deceased during his lifetime, and the remaining $5,000 was alleged to be damages due for the failure of Storm to provide complainant with an education. There was a demurrer to this bill, and thereupon the complainant tendered an amended bill, which was practically a copy of the original bill, except that it eliminated the claim for $5,000 damages for failure to educate, and made W. F. Storm, a brother of the deceased, who was the sole beneficiary under his will, a party defendant. The circuit court refused to allow the amended bill to be filed, sustained the demurrer to the original bill, and ordered that it be dismissed. From that decree this appeal was taken.

[1] There was no error in rejecting the amended bill. It set forth no new matter that was not known at the time of the argument of the demurrer to the original bill, and the facts are practically identical with those contained in the original bill, and in the exercise of a sound discretion the court properly refused to allow it to be filed.

In the case of Bowe v. Scott, 113 Va. 490, 75 S. E. 123, the syllabus, which is sustained by the opinion, states the law as follows: "While courts are liberal in allowing amendments of bills, and have discretion in the matter, still this discretion is in no sense arbitrary or capricious, but is, at all times, hedged about and governed by rules which have long been established and recognized as binding upon the courts. Where the matter of amendment is similar to that contained in the bill, and was either known to the complainants, or might well have been known to them, prior to the argument of the demurrer to the original bill, but was not brought forward until said demurrer was sustained on a ground involving its dismissal, the motion to amend comes too late."

[2-5] The substantial facts as stated in the bill are as follows: That the complainant was born January 18, 1885, at Pavelsthowe, in Germany, and was at the age of 18 living with his maternal grandmother; his father, mother, and maternal grandfather being dead. About this time he learned that Edward H. Storm wanted a boy to wait upon him in the capacity of a servant. The boy, at the age of 13, voluntarily applied for the position, and was accepted by Storm, who took him into his home, furnished him with shelter, food, and clothing, dressing him in the livery of a servant, and in return receiving from the boy small services, such as cleaning shoes, brushing clothes, cleaning guns, picking up game when Storm was hunting, etc. There was no contract, either express or implied, to pay the boy a consideration in money for his services when he went to live with Storm. This relation continued between the parties, in Germany, until July, 1910, when Storm came to New York, bringing the boy with him. In February, 1901, they came to Albemarle county, where Storm bought a farm, upon which he and the boy lived in the same relation and upon the same terms until September, 1905, when the complainant, then 20 years of age, voluntarily left the service of Storm and entered the railroad service.

The bill alleges that during the period prior to September, 1905, when the complainant entered the railroad service, Storm had paid him at different times about $120, and that more than half that sum had been paid to him during the last year before he went to the railroad. The complainant remained in the service of the railroad from September, 1905, until November, 1908, when he returned to the service of Storm, at the age of 23, where he remained until January, 1910, when Storm died. There is no allegation that the complainant ever asserted any claim for services against Storm during his lifetime. He alleges that when he returned from the railroad it was at the request of Storm by letter, saying that he would compensate him for work previously done, and would furnish him with board and lodging and pay him $400 per year to work as he had done before. The letter referred to is not produced.

Upon the facts alleged we are of opinion that no other relation but that of master and servant existed between these parties. Storm wanted a boy to wait on him and do the work of a servant. The boy sought the position and was accepted, not one word being said about wages. There was an implied obligation to feed, clothe, and lodge the servant, otherwise he could not have served. The services were not, however, rendered with the master's assent under such circumstances as raised a presumption that the infant expected to be paid or the adult to pay. It was a contract for necessities which the infant had the right to make, and which could be terminated at the will of either party.

The law is very well stated in Wood on Master and Servant (2d Ed.) p. 14, § 9, as follows: "The same rule prevails as to an infant as to an adult in reference to merely voluntary services. No recovery can be had by him unless there was an agreement, expressed or implied, to pay him for his services, or unless the services were rendered at the request of the person sought to be charged, or with his assent, under such circumstances as raise a presumption that the infant expected to have pay therefor, and that the adult expected to pay him. Thus in Deffrance v. Austin, 9 Pa. 309, the plaintiff, who was a minor, when not at work elsewhere, lived in his uncle's family and rendered services for him as the children of the family did, and during such time was supplied by the uncle with food and clothing. It was held that no implied promise to pay him for his services could be raised, and that no recovery could be had by him therefor. In Wilhelm v. Hardman, 13 Md. 140, the plaintiff, an infant, contracted with the defendant to work for him for his support and schooling. After having remained in the defendant's employ for some time, he broke off the contract and left his service, and brought an action for his services. The court held that, inasmuch as the consideration for which the services were rendered was actually necessary, and as he had received the consideration as fast as he performed his services, and as he could not put the defendant in statu quo, he could not recover of him for such services, even though he offered to deduct therefrom the value of the consideration received."

In the case at bar, the relation between the parties being that of master and servant, and the contract arising under that relation having been fully performed, nothing more can be recovered.

[6] The complainant has sought to maintain the jurisdiction of a court of equity to entertain his suit upon the theory that the relation of guardian and ward existed between the parties, and in support of this theory has contended that Edward H. Storm was guardian de facto, or de son tort.

This position is not tenable. A guardian de facto, or de son tort is purely a creature of a court of equity, and is one who takes possession of an infant's property without right or lawful authority, and will be required to account therefor. 21 Cyc. p. 20;

Anderson v. Smith, 102 Va. 697, 48 S. E. 29; Watts v. Watts, 104 Va. 269, 51 S. E. 859.

In the case before us Storm did not take possession of any property that belonged to the complainant. It is not claimed that the complainant had a dollar of property when he entered Storm's service, but this difficulty is sought to be obviated by the contention that the wages alleged to be due constituted estate of the infant in the hands of Storm. It is unnecessary to decide in this case whether or not unpaid wages in the hands of an employer, due to an infant, can be treated as estate of such infant so as to hold the employer liable therefor as guardian de son tort, because, as already shown, there were no such wages in the hands of Edward H. Storm.

[7] There is no merit in the claim of $5,000 damages for the failure of Edward H. Storm to have the complainant educated. No such obligation was implied in the contract of service; the complainant was under no restraint, and could have left the service of Storm at any time.

[8] As already seen, complainant left the service of Storm before he was 21, and did not return until he was 23. Storm died in little more than a year after such return. If there was anything due the complainant for services rendered during that period between his return from the railroad and the death of Storm, he had a plain and adequate remedy at law for its recovery.

We are of opinion that there was no error in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing complainant's bill. The decree appealed from must therefore be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Error to Law and Chancery Court of City of Roanoke.

Action by W. F. McClanahan against W. T. Bernard and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

Hall & Woods, of Roanoke, for plaintiffs in error. Johnston & Izard, of Roanoke, and John W. Carter, of Martinsville, for defendant in error.

CARDWELL, J. This is a writ of error awarded W. T. Bernard, the Roanoke Hat Company, Incorporated, and the Bernard Dupuy Company, Incorporated, to a judgment entered by the law and chancery court of the city of Roanoke in favor of W. S. McClanahan, in an attachment proceeding for the recovery of rent.

It was conceded in the oral argument before this court that the writ of error was improvidently awarded as to the Roanoke Hat Company, Incorporated, and should be dismissed; and the only complaint of W. T. Bernard is that the judgment is a personal judgment against him, but he took no exception to any of the rulings of the trial court, and therefore this writ of error was improvidently awarded as to him also.

The material facts in the case are as follows: By written lease defendant in error, McClanahan, rented certain premises situated in Roanoke city to the Roanoke Hat Company for 12 months, from January 1, 1911, to January 1, 1912. In the spring of 1911, the Roanoke Hat Company wrote to McClanahan, requesting him to make certain repairs to the leased premises, and agreeing that if he would do so, it, the Roanoke Hat Company, would have a new company, which was proposed to be organized for the purpose of taking over the business of the Roanoke Hat Company, execute a new lease for three years from October 1, 1911, at an increased rental. The repairs were made and the proposed new company was formed under the name of the Bernard-Dupuy Company, Incorporated, W. T. Bernard being its president, but this company refused to execute the lease for three years before mentioned, though it entered on the premises as an undertenant of the Roanoke Hat Company, paying rent at the increased rate to that company, and that company in turn paying the same rent to McClanahan; the new company having bought from the old all of its goods theretofore on the leased premises. This condition continued up to and after the expiration of the original lease (which contained no provision for renewal or extension), rent being paid to March 1, 1912, when the goods theretofore on the leased premises were removed, and shortly thereafter (within 30 days) the attachment in this case was issued, and was served upon the goods so removed in the city of Lynchburg, in the possession of the Bernard-Dupuy Company.

The learned judge of the trial court, to whom all matters of law and fact arising in the case were, by consent of parties, submitted for decision, upon the above facts took the view "that upon the expiration of the original term, and the continuance of the possession and the payment of rent by the Roanoke Hat Company to McClanahan, a new tenancy from year to year was created, beginning with the 1st day of January, 1912. The rent for the months of January and February (1912) having been paid, and the vacation of the property amounting to a notice of surrender, the amount of rent yet to become payable is for 10 months remaining of the year 1912."

In accordance with this view of the facts, the judgment here complained of was entered, the substance of which is that the plaintiff, W. S. McClanahan, is entitled to recover under his attachment for the amount of the rent to become due for the unexpired term of the lease, to wit, for 10 months, at the rate of $100 per month, and that the goods levied upon under the attachment are liable therefor.

The errors assigned to the judgment raise the question: First, did the court err in its construction of section 2962 of the Code of 1904, whereby the writ of attachment was held valid as against the goods of the undertenant, the Bernard-Dupuy Company? Second, is the judgment a personal judgment against the Bernard-Dupuy Co.? And, third, was the affidavit upon which the attachment issued defective?

[1] Section 2962 of the Code provides that "on complaint by any lessor, his agent or attorney, to a justice or to the clerk of the circuit court of the county or of the circuit or any city court of the corporation in which the leased premises or a part thereof may be, that any person liable to him for rent intends to remove, or is removing, or has, within thirty days, removed his effects from such premises, if such lessor, etc., make oath to the truth of such complaint to the best of his belief and to the rent which is reserved (whether in money or other thing) and will be payable within one year, and the time or times when it will be so payable, and also make oath either that there is not, or he believes, unless an attachment issues, that there will not be left on such premises property liable to distress sufficient to satisfy the rent so to become payable, such justice or clerk, as the case may be, shall issue an attachment for the said rent against such goods as might be distrained for the same if it had become payable, and against any other estate of the person so liable therefor."

When we turn to the statutes to ascertain what goods may be distrained for rent past due, section 2791 of the Code of 1904 very clearly answers the inquiry. In dealing with distress for rent, under the headline, "On what goods levied" it provides that "the distress may be levied on any goods of the lessee, or his assignee, or undertenant, found on the premises, or which may have been removed therefrom not more than thirty days."

If the contention of the learned counsel for plaintiffs in error that, there being no privity of contract or contract liability as between the lessor and the assignee, or undertenant, the language of section 2962 limits the right to sue out the attachment to a case where a person liable by contract for the payment of rent is removing or intends to remove the property from the leased premises, could be sustained, then much of the language of the statutes providing a remedy for the collection of rent might as well have been omitted, or should be regarded as meaningless. The liability of an undertenant of leased premises, as in this case, does not arise out of contractual relations between him and the lessor, but by virtue of statute, whereby he, upon entering the leased premises as undertenant, subjects his property carried thereon to liability for the rent contracted to be paid by the lessee of the premises, and this liability of his property continues while on the leased premises, and for 30 days after the same is removed therefrom; provided, however, that such goods of the undertenant cannot be subjected to the satisfaction of more than one year's rent, due or to become due, from the lessee to the lessor, as provided by statute. Code, §§ 2791, 2792.

The statute (section 2791, supra) plainly makes the goods of the undertenant liable for the rent, just as though they were the goods of the tenant himself; and by section 2962 it is provided that if the goods are liable to be distrained, they may be attached.

In this case the sale by the lessee of its goods on the leased premises to its assignee or undertenant, the Bernard-Dupuy Company, was in gross, and though there was no rent due from the lessee, at the time of the sale, nevertheless there was a liability on the contract for the rent, and the goods were taken over by the assignee or undertenant subject to and liable for one year's rent reserved to the lessor in the contract.

The opinion in Neff v. Ryman, 100 Va. 521, 42 S. E. 814, says: "The principle is elementary, and has received the repeated approval of this court, that when the relation of landlord and tenant has once been established, it attaches to all who may succeed to the possession through or under the tenant, whether immediately or mediately; and the succeeding tenant is as much bound by the acts and admissions of his predecessor as if they were his own. Emerick v. Tavenor, 9 Gratt. 224 [58 Am. Dec. 217]."

The argument that to so construe the statutes as to maintain the right of a landlord to attach the goods of an undertenant of the leased premises for rent not due would be a hardship, since under such a construction an undertenant could not safely carry his goods upon leased premises without making them security for his landlord's rent for one year, is without force, since the same argument might as well be made with respect to the hardship of the statute giving the right of distress against the undertenant's property for rent due, for when his goods go on the leased premises they become liable to distress for past-due rent, not exceeding one year, though it may have accrued before his undertenancy began. In fact a greater hardship might have to be borne in the last-named instance than in the first, for, as said in Burk's Pleading & Practice, p. 12: "It will be observed that the landlord may distrain on the undertenant for the whole amount of the rent due by the tenant, regardless of the state of the account between the tenant and the undertenant—e. g., if the tenant owes $1,000 rent, and the undertenant has contracted to pay only $100 for the part of the premises occupied by him, the landlord may levy on the property of the undertenant found on the leased premises for the entire $1,000 rent. The statute puts no limit on the extent of the liability of the assignee or undertenant."

It is clear, we think, that the intention of the Legislature was to give as effective remedy for rent to become due as for rent past due; and, the statutes being capable of a construction carrying this into effect, the courts must so construe them and hold, as did the lower court, that the goods of the undertenant in this case were subject to the attachment levied upon them.

[2] Neither is there any merit in the contention that the lower court erred in not sustaining the motion of plaintiff in error the Bernard-Dupuy Company to quash the attachment on the ground that upon the face of the affidavit and attachment it was im-providently sued out and levied on the goods of the Bernard-Dupuy Company.

The clerk of the law and chancery court and the clerk of the corporation court of Roanoke city is one and the same person, and the clerk's office of the two courts is one and the same. It did happen, as it seems, that the clerk wrote the affidavit on a printed form, and the words, "In the Corporation Court of the City of Roanoke," appear at the top, but nowhere else in the paper. The clerk certifies in the attachment, that: "Whereas W. S. McClanahan has instituted in our court of law and chancery of the city of Roanoke an action on the case * * * against * * * (naming the defendants), and there having been filed in our clerk's office of our said court an affidavit that the claim of said plaintiff asserted in said suit is believed to be just, that the affiant believes that the plaintiff is entitled to and ought to recover one thousand, two hundred ($1,200.00) dollars for rent reserved, and which is payable within one (1) year, and which is payable monthly," etc. Upon the face of the record the affidavit was unquestionably filed in the proper court by the proper officer, and his failure to substitute "Law and Chancery" for "Corporation" court was a mere clerical error, as to which plaintiff in error raised no objection in the lower court; and, if the objection could be raised in this court for the first time, we do not think it affords just ground of complaint.

[3] Nor does the fact that the action at law referred to in the clerk's certificate was never matured for hearing render the attachment for the rent void, for the attachment was good as a remedy for the collection of rent to become due under a contract, whether there was an action at law to recover it or not, since the right to sue out an attachment for rent is not dependent upon a pending action at law to recover the same.

As to the remaining ground of objection to the affidavit, namely, that all persons liable for the rent were made parties defendant, we deem it only necessary to say that the record shows that all of the defendants other than the Bernard-Dupuy Company had made themselves liable for the rent claimed in writing, and the Bernard-Dupuy Company was clearly liable therefor as an undertenant by virtue of the statute, as we have already observed.

[4] The remaining question requiring consideration is, Did the lower court enter a personal judgment against plaintiff in error the Bernard-Dupuy Company, the only defendant who did not acquiesce in the court's decision, but excepted thereto, and upon whom notice of the proceeding had not been personally served?

Reading the order of the court complained of as a whole, it conforms, as it appears to us, to the usual orders in such cases. So much of the order as is necessary to be quoted here is as follows: * * * * The court being of the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover under his attachment, and that the goods so attached are liable, and it being proven to the satisfaction of the court that the defendants are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000 for rent reserved by a contract on the premises known as Nos. 101 and 103 Commerce street, Roanoke, Va., and that the goods levied on in the attachment sued out in this case were removed from the leased premises within 30 days preceding the levy of said attachment, it further appearing to the court that the sergeant of Lynchburg, Va., has levied on certain goods, wares, and merchandise under said attachment, and that the same are now in the possession of the Bernard-Dupuy Company, Incorporated, a corporation in Lynchburg, it is ordered by the court that said sergeant sell said goods levied on, or as much thereof as may be necessary, as appears by his return on said attachment, upon the terms of said contract of rental of $100 per month for 10 months, beginning March 1, 1912, for cash as to amount past due at the time of sale," etc.

Not only has counsel for defendant in error in the argument of the case in this court disclaimed that the order of the lower court was, or should be, regarded as a personal judgment against any of the defendants in the attachment proceedings, but the order, in the form usual in such cases, when read and construed as a whole, reaches, as we interpret it and as the authorities hold, the goods attached only.

The case of Griffith v. Milwaukee Harvester Co., 92 Iowa, 634, 61 N. W. 243, 54 Am. St. Rep. 573, is in point. There the judgment was in an attachment proceeding against a nonresident, in the words: "That said plaintiff have and recover judgment against the defendant, Griffith, in the sum of $134.52, with 8 per cent. interest on same from this date, and costs in this case, * * * and that the property attached (certain lots) * * * be sold to satisfy said judgment and costs." There, as in the case here, objection was made to the judgment, on the ground that it was a personal judgment, but the court in disposing of the objection said: "If the portion which directed the sale of the attached property had been omitted, the judgment would have been a personal one, and therefore void, but it stated the amount which the Harvester Company was entitled to recover, and that is essential in a judgment in rem. As an entirety it is sufficient, although perhaps not in the best form, to constitute a valid judgment against the land."

In 4 Cyc. p. 824, it is stated: "Some statutes contemplate the rendition of a judgment personal in form, even where no jurisdiction has been obtained over the defendant's person, and it seems that such judgment will not be deemed void in any case, but that, whatever the form of judgment, it can have no further effect than binding on the property attached." Waples on Attachments, p. 511.

Other questions raised in this case, with which we have not specifically dealt, were either waived in the argument or are regarded as without merit.

The judgment complained of is affirmed. Affirmed.

1. TAXATION (§ 466*)—ASSESSMENT OF MINERAL LANDS—REVIEW AND CORRECTION—STATUTE.

Code 1904, § 437a, as amended by Acts 1910, c. 39, provides for a separate assessment of all mineral lands and for the certification thereof to the State Corporation Commission, which shall examine into the justice of the assessments and, if not assessed at its fair market value, direct the commonwealth's attorney to apply to have such assessment corrected, and that any person aggrieved by such assessment may also apply to have it corrected with the right of appeal. Code 1904, § 567, provides that any person aggrieved by an assessment may, "unless otherwise expressly provided by law," apply to the court for relief; section 568 provides for correction by the court; and section 573 that, if the auditor of public accounts shall deem the court's order erroneous, he may within one year thereafter file a petition for a rehearing. Held, that section 437a, as amended, furnished all the procedure for protecting the rights of the commonwealth in a proceeding to correct erroneous assessments of mineral lands; that section 567 excluded the correction of such assessments from the operation of that section and of sections 563, 573; and hence that the auditor of public accounts could not apply thereunder for a rehearing of a mineral land assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 829, 830; Dec. Dig. § 466.*]

2. PROHIBITION (§ 10*)—GROUNDS—WANT OR EXCESS OF JURISDICTION.

Prohibition, while not lying to correct error, lies to prevent a court from acting where it has no jurisdiction or is exceeding its jurisdiction; and hence a party petitioning for review and correction of an assessment on mineral lands under Code 1904, § 437a, as amended by Acts 1910, c. 39, which provides the exclusive procedure for correction thereof, was entitled to a writ of prohibition against the auditor of public accounts, whose petition to review such assessment instituted under Code 1904, § 573, was without authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 37-56; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Prohibition by Max Grief against Hon. Fulton Kegley, Judge of the Circuit Court of Bland County. Writ awarded.

J. J. A. Powell, of Wytheville, for petitioner. The Attorney General, for Auditor of Public Accounts.

BUCHANAN, J. Max Grief filed his petition in this court praying that the Honorable Fulton Kegley, judge of the circuit court of Bland county, be prohibited from further proceeding upon a petition filed in said court by the auditor of public accounts, seeking to have reheard an order made by that court upon the motion of Max Grief correcting an alleged erroneous assessment of mineral land.

Section 437a of the Code, as amended by an act of assembly approved February 19, 1910 (Acts 1910, pp. 52-54, c. 39), provides for the special and separate assessment of all mineral lands, improvements, fixtures, and machinery thereon and for the entry of such lands on the land books separately from other lands charged thereon. It further provides that a copy of such assessment shall be certified to the State Corporation Commission with the name and post office address of each person, firm, or corporation in whose name any such lands or interests therein have been assessed upon the land books, with the amount of tax extended thereon. Upon receiving such copy it is made the duty of the State Corporation Commission to examine into the justice of such assessments, and, if it shall appear to the Commission that any tract of land or any part thereof or improvements, etc., thereon has not been assessed at its fair market value, the said Commission shall direct the commonwealth's attorney for the county or corporation wherein such land is situated, or any special attorney it may designate, to apply in the name of the commonwealth to the circuit court for the county or corporation court of the city to have said assessment corrected. It further provides that any person feeling himself aggrieved by such assessment may apply to the same court to have the assessment corrected.

Under the provisions of this act Max Grief, the petitioner in this case, moved the circuit court of Bland county to correct an alleged erroneous assessment of his lands lying in said county. Upon a hearing of his motion, which was defended by S. W. Williams, Jr., special attorney for the commonwealth, the court granted the relief prayed for by the landowner, Grief, by an order entered October 23, 1912.

On March 12, 1913, C. Lee Moore, auditor of public accounts, offered to file his petition for a rehearing of said order. His petition was objected to by Grief, the landowner, upon the grounds:

"(1) That section 573 of the Code, under which said petition by its terms is offered to be filed, has no application to mineral assessments but applies to general assessments.

"(2) That the auditor is not a proper party to make any motion in the matter, and that section 437a, under which the original notice was had, gives full proceedings in the matter by appeal at the instance of the Corporation Commission and not by the auditor."

These objections were overruled and the petition by leave of the court, was filed.

By section 567 of Pollard's Code it is provided that any person assessed with taxes on lands, or other property, or a license tax, aggrieved thereby, may, "unless otherwise specially provided by law," apply within a time named for relief to the court in which the commissioner gave bond and qualified, or to which or to whose clerk such bond and the certificate of his qualification were returned. That section requires the attorney for the commonwealth to defend the motion, and that the commissioner making the assessment or his successor in office shall be examined as a witness touching the application, and the facts proved certified.

Section 568 provides when the court may order such assessment to be corrected and requires a copy of any order made under it correcting an erroneous assessment to be certified by the court to the auditor of public accounts and the treasurer of the state.

By section 573 of Pollard's Code it is provided that: "If from the statement of facts or other evidence the auditor of public accounts shall be of opinion that the order of the court granting the redress is erroneous, he may within one year from the time such order is made, file a petition for a rehearing of such application. Said petition, which is to be in the name of the commonwealth, is to be presented and the hearing conducted by the attorney for the commonwealth, and the case reheard as if there had been no previous hearing."

[1] It is clear, as it seems to us, from a comparison of the provisions of section 437a of the Code, as amended by the act of February 19, 1910, with the provisions of sections 567, 568, and 573 of the Code, that the petition filed by the auditor for a rehearing of the application of Max Grief, and the order entered in that proceeding by the circuit court at its October term, 1912, is without authority of law. The manner in which erroneous assessment of mineral lands may be corrected is specially provided for by section 437a of the Code and amendments thereto, and therefore, by the express provisions of section 567, the correction of mineral land assessments is excluded from the operation of that section and sections 568 and 573.

By section 437a and amendments thereto, copies of the assessments of mineral lands or interests therein are to be certified to the State Corporation Commission. Upon receipt of such copies it is made the duty of that Commission to examine into the justice of any such assessments, and if it shall appear to the Commission that any tract of land, or any part thereof, or the improvements, fixtures, or machinery thereon, or any right or interest in the same, or any part thereof, has not been assessed at its fair market value, the Commission is required to direct the commonwealth's attorney for the county or corporation where the assessment was made, or any other special attorney it may designate, to apply in the name of the commonwealth to the proper court to have the assessment corrected. The original assessment is made by the assessor or commissioner of the revenue, as the case may be, subject to the action of the State Corporation Commission, and the Commission is authorized to employ for the purposes of the act "such person or persons as may be necessary to make, with the assessor or commissioner of the revenue, such inquiry into the value and such examination of the property and interests required by this act to be separately assessed, and of the improvements, fixtures, and machinery thereon, as it may deem necessary." That section further provides: "That the person or persons employed by the State Corporation Commission may be required to give aid to the commonwealth's attorney or any special attorney that may be employed by the said Commission in prosecuting or defending any application for the correction of any assessment under this act by obtaining and giving information of facts, names of witnesses or otherwise." From the decision of the trial court in the proceeding to correct such erroneous assessment, both parties are expressly given the right of appeal.

The provisions of section 437a, as amended, furnish all the necessary machinery for fully protecting the rights of the commonwealth in proceedings to correct erroneous assessments of mineral lands. They clothe the Corporation Commission with the power and impose upon it the duty of seeing that the mineral lands of the commonwealth are assessed at their fair market value.

Section 437a, as amended, confers no power and imposes no duty upon the auditor of public accounts to represent the commonwealth in the proceedings provided by that section for the correction of erroneous assessments of mineral lands. It confers that power and imposes that duty upon the State Corporation Commission, and it is manifest, when that section is read in connection with chapter 24 of the Code, that the Legislature never intended that under the provisions of section 573 of the Code the auditor of public accounts should also represent the commonwealth in proceedings for the correction of erroneous assessments of mineral lands and have the right to have reheard any decision in such a proceeding which he might deem erroneous, although the State Corporation Commission might be fully satisfied that the decision was correct.

The next question is: Is this a proper case for a writ of prohibition?

[2] It is well settled that the writ of prohibition does not lie to correct error but to prevent the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court by the judge to whom it is directed, either where he has no jurisdiction at all or is exceeding his jurisdiction. If the court or judge has jurisdiction to enter any order in the proceeding sought to be prohibited, the writ does not lie. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Beale, Judge, 102 Va. 295, 303, 46 S. E. 37. Burks' Pleading & Practice, 777-778, and cases cited.

The averments of the petition of the auditor show that it is a proceeding under section 575 of the Code. As we have seen, that section gives the auditor no authority to file a petition in any proceeding instituted under the provisions of section 437a, as amended, for the correction of an erroneous assessment of mineral lands. Neither has the district court jurisdiction to consider or grant any relief in such a proceeding upon a petition filed by the auditor. As the auditor has no right to file a petition to rehear the order entered in the proceeding instituted by him under section 437a of the Code, as amended, for the correction of the erroneous assessment of his mineral lands, and as the district court has no jurisdiction to enter any order in such proceeding upon the petition of the auditor, it follows that the petitioner is entitled to a writ of prohibition, as prayed for.

Writ awarded.

Under Code 1904, §§ 1697, 1702, declaring that the committee of an insane person shall be entitled to his custody and control, shall take possession of and manage his estate, and may sue and be sued in respect thereto, the committee of an insane person committed to a hospital for care, maintenance, and treatment, who is a beneficiary of a trust fund held and administered by the hospital, may maintain a suit to enforce the trust and protect the property against misappropriation.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Augusta County.

Action by A. Stuart Robertson, committee of Joseph S. Rowe, an insane person, against the General Board of State Hospitals for the Insane, the Western State Hospital, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The facts leading up to this litigation are these: The will of Sidney R. Murkland, which was duly admitted to probate in the circuit court of Amherst county, Va., after providing for the payment of funeral expenses and debts, gives "To 'Trustees State Hospital, Staunton, Va.,' where my son Sidney Price Murkland is now cared for, the entire balance of my property, real and personal, the income from which to be used by said trustees for purchase extra comforts patients said Hospital for all time."

Testator's estate consisted of a small amount of personal property and some real estate in the city of Lynchburg, and a farm containing 150 odd acres situated in Amherst county. The Western State Hospital, having accepted the trust, brought suit in the corporation court for the city of Lynchburg against the administrator with the will annexed, the other beneficiaries under the will, and creditors, to administer the estate. The Amherst county property was sold by a decree of the court to the Western State Hospital for $17,025, of which sum the hospital paid to the court's commissioner $3,500, the amount necessary to discharge the unpaid indebtedness of the estate and costs and expenses of litigation. The court in confirming the sale decreed that the balance of the purchase money "is under the will of S. R. Murkland, deceased, the property of the said Western State Hospital," and therefore directed a conveyance of the land to be made to the hospital, which was accordingly done.

By an act of the General Assembly, approved February 20, 1906 (Laws 1906, c. 48), the special board of directors of the Western State Hospital were authorized and directed, under the supervision and control of the general Board of Directors of the State Hospitals of Virginia for the Insane (hereinafter called the General Board), to "erect on the Murkland land" suitable buildings, etc., for the establishment of a colony for the reception, care, treatment, training and employment of 300 epileptic patients. No action was taken under the foregoing act, and at the next session the General Assembly passed another act, approved March 12, 1908 (Laws 1908, c. 195), which provided that if in the opinion of the General Board it should appear proper the Western State Hospital should sell and convey the whole or any part of the "Murkland land," and with the proceeds purchase other lands in Amherst county for the purposes of said epileptic colony. Thereupon the General Board directed the Western State Hospital to make sale of the "Murkland land" for the purposes aforesaid.

The Western State Hospital then filed its bill in the circuit court of the city of Richmond against the General Board, reciting the foregoing facts and charging that the "Murkland land" in its hands was impressed with a trust in favor of the inmates of the Western State Hospital, as declared by the will of Sidney R. Murkland, deceased, under which to the extent of $14,000 the land was acquired, that the trusts declared in the will were clear, definite, and legal, and that complainant was competent to execute the trusts, etc. The object of that suit was to determine the question of the power of the General Assembly to enact the foregoing statutes authorizing the General Board to divert the trust property from the purposes to which it, or its proceeds, had been dedicated by the testator's will.

The General Board demurred to the bill upon the ground that the suit was in effect a suit against the state, and a suit by one branch or arm of the state government against another branch or arm of the state government, and therefore that the circuit court of the city of Richmond was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the case. The circuit court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill, and its decree was affirmed on appeal to this court. *Western State Hospital v. Caskie & Caskie, of Lynchburg, and the Attorney General, for appellants. Timberlake & Nelson, of Staunton, for appellee.

WHITTLE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The present suit was instituted by the appellee, A. Stuart Robertson, committee of Joseph S. Rowe, an insane person, against the Western State Hospital, trustee under the will of Sidney R. Murkland, deceased, the General Board, and the individual members thereof. The bill alleges that Joseph S. Rowe had been adjudged a lunatic in the county of Augusta, the place of his residence, and had been committed to the Western State Hospital for care, maintenance, and treatment, and still is an inmate of that asylum, and that he is one of the beneficiaries of the trust created by the Murkland will, and has such property interest in the trust subject as to entitle his committee to invoke the jurisdiction of a court of equity to establish the trust and protect the trust property from the misappropriation sought to be made of it by the General Board under the authority of the acts of the General Assembly above mentioned; that said acts are not only in contravention of the state Constitution, but are also violative of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that they deprive the lunatic of property rights without due process of law and deny to him the equal protection of the law; and that the proposed diversion is tantamount to taking private property for public use without just compensation. The bill prays that the will be construed and that its true meaning and intent be declared; that the land conveyed by the commissioner of the corporation court of Lynchburg to the Western State Hospital be held to be impressed with the trust declared by the Murkland will in favor of the lunatic Joseph S. Rowe, and other inmates of the asylum similarly situated; that the Western State Hospital as trustee be required to administer the trust in accordance with the provisions of the will; and that the General Board be declared to be without lawful authority to direct any disposition of the land in conflict with the disposition thereof made by the testator in his will.

The General Board and the Western State Hospital demurred to the bill, and appealed from two decrees of the circuit court of Augusta county; one overruling the demurrer (but giving the defendants leave to answer the bill), and the other granting the relief prayed for.

Several grounds of demurrer are assigned, but, as interpreted by appellants in their petition for appeal, they practically resolve themselves into two propositions, namely: (1) That the committee has no authority to maintain the suit, because the estate of the lunatic is not involved; and (2) that this is "a suit against a public corporation or board, created and existing for purely governmental purposes, and as mere agencies of the state, composed exclusively of persons who have no personal interest in the subject-matter, and are only acting as an arm of the commonwealth, whatever its form, is in effect a suit against the state."

[1] 1. The statute provides for the appointment of a committee for a person found to be insane (Code, § 1697), and declares that such committee "shall be entitled to the custody and control of his person (when he resides in the state, and is not confined in a hospital or jail), shall take possession of his estate, and may sue and be sued in respect thereto. * * * He shall take care of and preserve such estate and manage it to the best advantage. * * *" Section 1702.

In Bird's Committee v. Bird, 21 Grat. (62 Va.) 712, it was held that every suit respecting the person or estate of the lunatic must be in the name of the committee, unless his interests are adverse to the lunatic, in which case it shall be brought in the name of the lunatic by his next friend approved by the court.

We need hardly stop to discuss the proposition that the right of maintenance, either entire or partial, in a trust fund, constitutes such a proprietary right in the fund as entitles the beneficiary to the protection of the courts with respect to it. The contrary doctrine would outlaw all settlements made for support and maintenance and lead to untold mischief.

[2, 3] 2. The vice in the second ground of demurrer is that it fails to distinguish between a suit against the Western State Hospital in its public governmental capacity, and a suit against it in its private capacity as trustee under the Murkland will. In the former character a suit against it would be a suit against the state, and such suit cannot be maintained by an individual unless the state chooses to waive its immunity and submit itself to the jurisdiction of the courts. On the other hand, that the Western State Hospital, in its private capacity, is suable, is equally plain. In this instance it has seen fit to accept the trust, and stands upon the same footing with respect to it as any other trustee. Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. 128, 11 L. Ed. 205; Barnum v. City of Baltimore, 62 Md. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 219; Regents v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 12 Mich. 138; Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169.

The foregoing distinction has been repeatedly recognized by the decisions of this court. Thus, in Dunningtons v. President and Directors of the Northwestern Turnpike Road, 6 Grat. (47 Va.) 160, it was held that the defendant, a public corporation, was liable to be sued for work and labor performed and materials furnished for the corporation by the plaintiff.

So also, in Eastern Lunatic Asylum v. Garrett, 27 Grat. (68 Va.) 163, an action of trover was maintained against the asylum for food supplies taken from the plaintiff during the Civil War by the United States forces and sent to the asylum and used for the support of the inmates. And in Blanton, Com., v. Southern Fertilizing Co., 77 Va. 335, the same principle was maintained. See, also, Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. Ed. 204; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. Ed. 447; Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 531, 23 L. Ed. 623.

In Mal's Adm'r v. Eastern State Hospital, 97 Va. 507, 34 S. W. 617, 47 L. R. A. 577, it was held that the asylum was not liable in damages for personal injuries inflicted on one of the inmates by the negligence of persons administering the powers of the corporation. But in that case the decision in Eastern Lunatic Asylum v. Garrett, supra, is expressly approved.

Appellants claim much wider scope for the decision in Western State Hospital against the General Board than is warranted by the opinion. In that case the court merely held that the circuit court of the city of Richmond possessed only such equity jurisdiction as is conferred upon it by statute, and rested the decision on the ground that it was without jurisdiction to entertain the suit in the particular case; the parties to the record both being public corporations created for governmental purposes.

[4] We deem it unnecessary to prolong this opinion by a more extended review of the authorities. With rare exceptions they recognize the obvious distinction between the control which the Legislature may exercise over property held by a public corporation for public purposes, and of property held by such corporations as trustee under private grant, with restrictions and trust limitations imposed by the grant. In the former case the power of the Legislature over the property is supreme; in the latter, it may prohibit the public corporation from accepting the trust, but, when once accepted, the trust subject must be applied to the purposes to which it has been dedicated by the grantor.

[5] On the merits of the case we entertain no doubt that the two acts of the General Assembly authorizing the General Board to divert to a distinctly different object private property donated by the Murkland will to a well-defined valid trust are wholly unconstitutional and void. The subject-matter of the trust was the absolute property of the testator, who saw fit, through the medium of a trustee of his own selection, to appropriate the income arising therefrom to a designated class of unfortunate persons, and not to the public. In these circumstances, it would indeed be a dangerous doctrine to hold that the General Assembly has power to seize upon private property thus dedicated and appropriate it to a wholly different purpose, however meritorious such purpose may be. If the trust declared by the Murkland will is lawful, the beneficiaries have property rights in the trust subject which cannot be taken away from them by the Legislature. If, on the contrary, the trust is unlawful, the property belongs to the heirs at law of Sidney R. Murkland, deceased, and is equally under the protection of the law. So that, in no aspect of the case, can the contention of appellants prevail.

[6] The Attorney General for the first time in his closing argument raised the question that the decree should be reversed because the heirs at law were not made parties. It would have been better practice had this objection been made at the beginning of the litigation rather than at the close; but the objection is without merit. The will has long since been duly admitted to probate and its validity is not questioned, and the contentions of both litigants rest upon the validity of the donation. In such case, the heirs at law of the testator are not necessary parties.

[7] The last assignment of error goes to that part of the decree which awards costs against the defendants. Appellants are public officers of the state, and have no personal interest in the litigation, and were represented by and acted under the advice of the Attorney General. We are of opinion that costs ought not to have been awarded against them. To that extent, therefore, the decree of October 28, 1911, will be amended, and with that amendment the two decrees appealed from must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Where the charter of a mutual assessment fire company, which was made a part of the contract between the parties, provided that each member of the association should be notified of the assessment, at least 30 days before the last day of payment, by mailing such notice to the post office address given by the member in the application for insurance, and that in case of change of address the member should in writing furnish the secretary with his new address, and the insured, who was not then living at her old address, had not notified the secretary of any change, the fact that the company sent the notice, which it had previously sent on postcards

A. Moore, Jr., of Berryville, Edward Nichols, of Leesburg, and Moore, Barbour, Keith & McCandlish, of Fairfax, for plaintiff in error. Ward & Larrick, of Winchester, and F. B. Whiting, of Berryville, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This suit was brought by Harriot S. Turner to recover of the plaintiff in error $1,000, the amount of an insurance policy, against loss by fire issued by it upon certain real estate owned by the plaintiff.

Two defenses were made by the defendant company: (1) That the plaintiff failed to pay an assessment ordered by the board of directors, which was due December 31, 1910, and that after that date, under the terms of the policy, it was suspended and had no force or effect at the date of the loss; (2) that, contrary to the plaintiff's statement and representation in her application for the insurance, there was, at the time of such application, a lien on the property created by the plaintiff.

There was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, which we are asked to review.

The defendant is a mutual fire insurance company, organized under a charter granted by the state of Virginia. Acts 1897-98, p. 17. The application for the policy sued on contains the following covenant: "That this application and the policy to be issued, embracing the property above described, shall be taken and construed in connection with the charter of said company, its constitution and by-laws, as embodying the entire final contract between the undersigned and said company." The defendant company has no paid-up capital. Persons insuring pay a premium in advance for the first year's insurance and also give to the company what is termed a premium note, which is subject to such assessments as may be necessary, in the discretion of the board of directors, to discharge the obligations and liabilities of the company. All persons insured by the company become members thereof and are bound to the company and to each other to make good their proportionate amount (which shall be in proportion to the amount of their several premium notes) of any loss or damage by fire or lightning for which the company is liable. The purpose is not to make money but by means of the organization to secure protection against fire at the least possible cost. To accomplish this, prompt payment of assessments to pay losses is essential. Under the method of operation adopted by the company, all premiums on all policies were calculated to the 1st day of January every year, and all assessments were made in advance and made payable on or before the 31st day of December of each year, and, unless paid on or before that day, the insurance became suspended under the provisions of the contract.

The sixth by-law provides, "In the event of default in the payment of any assessment which may at any time be made on the premium notes given to and held by this company on or before December 31st of each year, as to the annual assessment, * * * then the policy of such delinquent member shall be suspended and be not binding on the said company until payment of such assessment or assessments shall be made;" and further provides, "But payment of such delinquent assessment or assessments shall, in no case, entitle the assured to the benefit of a loss or damage sustained during such suspension;" and provides further that notice of such assessment shall be mailed to the assured at least thirty days before the final or last day for payment thereof."

This by-law is enacted in pursuance of the express authority to that effect contained in section 12 of the act of incorporation. Section 11 of the charter provides that the board of directors "shall before the commencement of each fiscal year, at such time as it deems proper, make an approximate estimate of the amount of money which said company is likely to need during the next fiscal year * * * and how much of said premium note or bond will probably be required to discharge all said liabilities, losses, claims and demands, and shall call on the insured to pay the same by such time as may be specified in the order or by-laws."

* * Each member shall be notified of the rate of assessment, payment of which is called for and the time in which it is required to be made, at least thirty days before the final or last day of payment. Mailing such notice to the post office address given by the member in the application for insurance (and in case of change of the name, such address as the member shall in writing furnish the secretary) shall in all cases be sufficient notice to such member."

The application of the insured contains the stipulation and agreement that all the answers to the questions therein propounded shall be construed as material in all cases.

The record shows that on October 7, 1907, George E. Pfaster, acting on behalf of his mother-in-law, the plaintiff in this suit, made application in writing to the defendant company for insurance to the amount of $1,000 on a certain tenant house situated on her farm in Clarke county. The policy was issued in the name of the plaintiff, Harriot V. Turner, and a premium note for $200 was executed in her name by Pfaster. The cash payment made at the time of the insurance carried the policy for 14 months and 23 days to January 1, 1909; as already seen, 12 premiums being calculated to that day on each year and made payable on or before December 31st. It appears that the insured did not pay her premium assessed in the year 1908 for 1909 until some time after it was due. She did, however, subsequently pay it, and thereupon her policy, which had been suspended, was reinstated. The premium assessed the next year (1909) for the year 1910 was paid within the time prescribed by the by-laws. The next premium due was that assessed in 1910 for the year 1911. This premium was due December 31, 1910, and was not paid, and the policy became suspended. The premium remained unpaid, after the policy was suspended, until January 9, 1911, when the property insured was destroyed by fire. It thus appears that the plaintiff was called upon but three times after she became a member of the company to pay her annual assessment, and that on two of these occasions she was in default. Her indifference to paying her premiums when due is further shown by her own testimony, wherein she admits her knowledge of the fact that, under the rules of the company, the premium for 1911 was due and payable on or before December 31, 1910, and yet she took no notice of it, saying: "Why should I bother myself about their business; it is their business to notify me and I don't intend to pay until I am notified."

In her application for insurance the plaintiff stated, in answer to a question, that her post office address was "Bluemont, Va." This information for the guidance of the company was acted upon, and each of the three notices of assessment that the company was called upon to give the plaintiff was sent to that address. The record shows that the plaintiff had a home at Bluemont, Va., where she lived a large part of the year. Her son-in-law, George E. Pfaster, and his wife, her daughter, lived at this home with her. She also maintained a home in the city of Washington, where she spent a portion of her time. She appears to have spent much of her time traveling about and was absent from her Bluemont home at the time the third and last assessment was sent to that address in accordance with the directions contained in her application for insurance. Before leaving home she directed the postmaster at Bluemont to forward her mail. The record shows that her home at Bluemont was on a free delivery route, with a mail box in front of her house with her name upon it, and that the notice now in question was delivered there and received by her son-in-law. The two first notices of assessment sent to the plaintiff were by postal cards, and it appears that it had been the practice of the company generally to send these notices in the form of postal cards. The third notice now in question was mailed to every member of the company, including the plaintiff, in the form of a printed circular inclosed in an open one-cent envelope, with the return request of the company printed thereon. It also appears that postal cards are first-class mail matter and, upon request of the addressee, can be forwarded from one post office to another, whereas printed notices mailed in unsealed stamped envelopes with a one-cent stamp on them cannot be forwarded without the payment of additional postage, but that in all other respects they are treated as first-class matter.

[1] Upon these facts bearing on the giving of the notice by mail, as submitted by the charter, the circuit court, over the objection of the defendant, gave instruction No. 1 for the plaintiff, as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant had, before November, 1910, sent its notices of assessment by postal card or in such way that the mail could be forwarded by the local postmaster and such had been its custom and practice, and that the plaintiff had received such notices and they were so stamped that they could be forwarded, and that Mrs. H. S. Turner, the plaintiff, had directed the postmaster at Bluemont to forward her mail to her, and he had forwarded all of her mail which under the post office regulations could be forwarded, and that the defendant company in 1910 changed its rule and, instead of sending notice of assessment by postal or in such a way that such notices could be forwarded the addressee, it sent such notices in a printed circular and put it in a one-cent envelope which was not forwardable under the post office regulations, and that she (the plaintiff) had no notice of such change and did not receive the printed circular, and she had relied upon the custom and practice of the company in the ordinary course of business to mail its assessment notices to its policy holders in first-class mail, and such method was the proper and ordinary course of business to pursue, which reasonable and ordinary business prudence required, if because of the change of method of mailing the notice was not forwarded to and received by the plaintiff, or any one authorized by her to receive the same, then this change of method of mailing was not sufficient and is not a good defense to this action."

We are of opinion that this instruction is erroneous and should not have been given. It ignores the contract between the parties, which was that: "Mailing such notice to the post office address given by the member in the application for insurance (and in case of change of the same, such address as the member shall in writing furnish the secretary) shall in all cases be sufficient notice to such member." Charter, § 11.

It is not pretended that the plaintiff ever intimated to the company in writing or otherwise that she had changed her post office address as given in her application. This provision of the contract shows that it was within the contemplation of the parties that, if the insured changed her post office address, it was her duty to notify the secretary of the company, so that notice could be sent her without extra expense. Giving notice in writing to the secretary of the company of any change in the plaintiff's post office address was, under the express terms of the contract, essential in order to impose any duty upon the company with respect to such new address. The company had no knowledge that the plaintiff was absent from home or that she had instructed the postmaster at Bluemont to forward her mail, and if it had known these facts it would have been under no contract obligation to put sufficient postage upon the notice to enable the postmaster to forward the same to such address as the plaintiff might direct. The company discharged its entire contract obligations with respect to this notice when it placed the envelope inclosing the same in the post office at Waterford, Va., its home office, with sufficient postage thereon to secure its transmission to the post office at Bluemont, Va., the post office address given by the plaintiff in her application.

[2, 3] The facts do not justify the suggestion of this instruction that the jury might consider whether the defendant had waived its contract rights by some previous habit of the company to send out notices by postal card, or that the company had changed its rule with respect to mailing notices by postal card. The contract by which the parties are bound contains no provision obligating the company to send these notices by postal card or in any other designated way. The evidence does not show any rule of the company on the subject, nor does it establish any custom with respect to the method. So far as the plaintiff is concerned, she had only received two notices prior to the one in question, which was wholly insufficient to justify her in supposing that the company had adopted as a rule the postal card method of sending notices and would never employ any other method. This instruction is further erroneous in submitting to the jury the question whether or not mailing notices by first-class mail was the proper and ordinary course of business to pursue which reasonable and ordinary business prudence required. If any question of reasonableness should have been submitted to the jury at all, it should have been the reasonableness, not of a rule that had not been followed in the case then before them, but the reasonableness, under all the circumstances, of the method which was followed. It was, however, not a question of the reasonableness of either method. The only question was whether or not the defendant had deposited the notice in the post office with sufficient postage paid thereon to insure its delivery at the post office which the plaintiff had given. This was all that the contract required and all that the plaintiff was entitled to demand.

[4] The converse of the propositions contained in instruction No. 1, for the plaintiff, is contained in the following instructions asked for by the defendant, which the court refused to give:

"(L) The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, at the time of her application for the policy in litigation, either by herself or through her agent, gave as her post office address Bluemont, Va., and that she has not since, by written notice to said company, directed a change to be made in such address, and if they further believe from the evidence that on or before the 30th day of November, 1910, a notice setting forth the rate of assessment fixed by the board of directors to meet the expenses of the company for the year 1911, and the time by which the assessment was to be paid, was put in an envelope addressed to the plaintiff at Bluemont, Va., and deposited in the post office at Waterford, Va., the place of the home office of the defendant company, for transmission to the plaintiff, duly stamped, and that the plaintiff did not prior to the occurrence of the fire by which the building insured was destroyed pay to the defendant said assessment, then they shall find for the defendant; the court instructing the jury that it is immaterial whether or not said notice was actually received by the plaintiff or not."

"(M) The court instructs the jury that mailing such form of notice of assessment as has been proven to have been used by the defendant company in this case, in giving its members notices of the assessment for the year 1911, inclosed in an unsealed envelope with a one-cent postage stamp attached, constitutes a sufficient mailing of such notice, if the jury further believe from the evidence that such notice was addressed to the plaintiff at the post office address furnished to the company in accordance with its by-laws and regulations at least 30 days before the said assessment became payable."

"(N) The court instructs the jury that in the application of the assured for membership in the defendant company, which is the foundation of the policy sued on in this case, the post office address of the assured is given by her as Bluemont; and the court further instructs the jury that there is no evidence in this case tending to show that said post office address was subsequently changed by means of notice in writing to the defendant company; and if the jury believe from the evidence that the board of directors of the defendant company fixed the assessment on its members for the year 1911, and that the by-laws of the company prescribed that the same should be paid on or before December 31, 1910, and that on or before the 30th day of November, 1910, the defendant company caused printed notice of the rate of said assessment and the time fixed for payment of the same to be deposited in the post office at Waterford, Va., addressed to the plaintiff at Bluemont, with sufficient postage thereon to pay for its transmission to Bluemont, Va., and that the said plaintiff failed to pay the said assessment prior to the date of the destruction of the insured building, they will find for the defendant; the court instructing the jury for the purposes of this case that it is immaterial whether the said plaintiff ever actually received said notice or not."

Without further comment it is sufficient to say that these three instructions asked for by the defendant correctly state the law of the case presented by the record and should have been given.

[5] The action of the circuit court in giving instruction No. 3, asked for by the plaintiff, is assigned as error. That instruction is as follows:

"No. 3. The jury are instructed that, if the plaintiff had paid off and discharged the deed of trust on the property in October, 1909, and that thereafter the policy was regularly continued in force by payment of the premium in 1909, and neither since that date nor at the time of the fire was there any lien on the property, the jury are instructed that the existence of the lien at the time of the policy worked no forfeiture thereof."

The objection to this instruction is not well taken. The record shows that the lien which was on the property at the time of the issuance of the policy was paid off on October 27, 1909, and that after it was so paid off the company collected the premium for 1910 and reinstated the policy and assessed it as a policy in force for 1910. Under the constitution and by-laws, which are a part of the contract between the parties, the payment of each annual assessment is a renewal of the policy. When, therefore, the plaintiff paid in 1909 the premium for 1910, it renewed the policy for another year, and at the time the insurance was thus renewed for the year 1910 there was no lien upon the property and none has been created since.

[6] It is further insisted that the court erred in permitting the witness George E. Pfister, who signed the application and the premium note on behalf of the plaintiff, to testify that both the application and the note were in blank when he signed them, and further to testify that the word "none," in answer to the question in the application with respect to incumbrances, was not in his handwriting and was not put there at his direction. This evidence was not objected to until the witness had left the stand, when the court was asked to exclude it upon the ground that it was an attempt, by parol evidence, to alter and vary the terms of a written contract.

The evidence was clearly inadmissible. Southern Mutual Ins. Co. v. Yates, 28 Grat. (69 Va.) 585. The learned judge of the circuit court recognizes that this evidence was not admissible, certifying in bill of exceptions No. 1 that it was all excluded by instructions Nos. 2 and 3. Those instructions do not in terms exclude the evidence, but their effect is to do so. Further consideration of this matter is, however, unnecessary, because the case must be remanded, and, if another trial is had, the evidence objected to will not be admitted.

The judgment complained of must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded to the circuit court for a new trial, if the plaintiff be so advised, to be had not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

ISAACS v. ISAACS et al.

DIVORCE (§ 256*)—DECREE FOR ALIMONY—LIEN OF DECREE.

Where a wife was given a decree of divorce from bed and board, with an award of a specified monthly sum as permanent alimony, and decreeing a lien on the husband's lands therefor, as well as for the unpaid temporary alimony formerly granted and for counsel fees and costs, such lien cannot be affected by a decree of absolute divorce rendered in another state in favor of the husband, even though the foreign court had jurisdiction of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 725, 726; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Russell County.

Suit by S. F. Isaacs, as guardian, against G. G. Isaacs, in which Minnie L. Isaacs, who was made a party defendant, filed a cross-bill against S. F. Isaacs and others. From a judgment for complainant, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Vicars & Peery, of Wise, and W. W. Bird and Routh & Routh, all of Lebanon, for appellants. Finney & Wilson, for appellee.

KEITH, P. The bill in this case was filed by S. F. Isaacs as guardian of certain infant defendants, setting out that G. G. Isaacs, the former guardian of the infants, had confessed a judgment as such guardian in the circuit court of Russell county for the sum of $1,811.75, with interest from March 13, 1909, and praying that certain real estate of the defendant in the counties of Russell and Wise might be sold and the proceeds applied to its satisfaction. This bill was filed at the first April rules, 1909, and on the 18th day of May of that year Minnie L. Isaacs filed her petition, in which she alleges that the judgment set forth in the bill is fraudulent and void, so far as her rights are concerned, and was confessed for the purpose of hindering and delaying her in the enforcement of a decree for alimony and suit money, rendered in her favor upon her bill filed in the circuit court of Wise county, in which G. G. Isaacs was defendant.

In the divorce suit J. H. Darter was appointed to receive any money decreed to Minnie L. Isaacs for her support and that of her infant children, and the prayer of her petition is that she and J. H. Darter may be made parties defendant to the bill filed by S. F. Isaacs for the enforcement of his judgment against G. G. Isaacs.

The pleadings are in a confused state by reason of the several bills, answers, and cross-bills which were filed, and without going into them in detail we shall content ourselves with stating that in the divorce suit in Wise county a decree was entered on the 11th of July, 1908, enjoining and restraining G. G. Isaacs from selling or in any way disposing of any of the property, either real or personal, set forth in the bill of complaint, "so the said property both real and personal, and said estate shall be forthcoming to meet any decree which may be made in this cause."

On the 11th of January, 1909, a further decree was entered in the divorce suit in Wise county, in which it was decreed that the defendant pay to J. H. Darter, receiver, the sum of $40, "temporary alimony for the month of January, $10 having been paid in cash to complainant, and that the said defendant pay to J. H. Darter, on the first day of each month until the further order of this court, the further sum of $50 per month for temporary alimony for complainant; and the said J. H. Darter is hereby ordered to pay unto said complainant the sum of $10 in cash each month out of the said money received by him for the defendant and to furnish to complainant such wearing apparel and supplies as complainant may desire for herself and children to the amount of $40 each month, the residue of the said alimony hereby directed to be paid; and the said J. H. Darter is directed to furnish an itemized account of the supplies and wearing apparel furnished complainant pursuant to this order, and to file the same in the papers of this cause on the first day of the next term of this court."

Next in order after these decrees comes the confession of judgment set out in the original bill filed by S. F. Isaacs, dated February term, 1909, for $1,811.75, with interest from the 12th of March, 1909, and costs.

On the 4th of February, 1910, a further decree was entered in the circuit court of Wise county, in which it is adjudged and ordered that "Minnie L. Isaacs be and she is hereby granted a divorce from bed and board from the defendant, G. G. Isaacs, and the complainant and defendant be and they are hereby perpetually separated. And it is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the restraining order heretofore rendered herein on the 11th day of July, 1908, be and the same is hereby perpetuated, and that the defendant, G. G. Isaacs is perpetually enjoined and restrained from in any way interfering with said complainant and her infant children mentioned in said bill of complaint, or of doing any violence to them, or either of them, and that said defendant is also perpetually enjoined and restrained from selling or in any way disposing of any of the property, real or personal, named and set forth in said bill of complaint, during the lifetime of complainant, and that said property, both real and personal, be and the same is hereby held as security for the payment of the alimony hereinafter decreed in favor of complainant, as well as the alimony heretofore decreed in favor of complainant, and the costs of this suit, and the unpaid attorney's fee adjudged to be paid by the defendant, G. G. Isaacs, to counsel of complainant for their services in the prosecution of this suit. And it is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the defendant, G. G. Isaacs, do pay to complainant the sum of $50 per month, due and payable on the first day of each and every month from the date hereof during the lifetime of complainant, as well as the alimony heretofore decreed to be paid to her, and that said defendant shall pay unto Vicars & Peery and H. A. Routh, attorneys for complainant, the sum of $150 counsel fees, the said defendant having heretofore paid to the said Vicars & Peery on account of counsel fees the sum of $50, the court being of opinion that the sum of $200 is a reasonable sum to be paid by the said G. G. Isaacs, defendant, as counsel fees to the said attorneys of complainant for their services in the prosecution of this suit. And it further appearing to the court, from the report of J. H. Darter, receiver, filed herein, that the defendant, G. G. Isaacs, has only paid the sum of $140 on account of temporary alimony heretofore adjudged and decreed to be paid by him to the said J. H. Darter, receiver, for the benefit of complainant, by decree rendered herein on the 11th day of January, 1909, and that the said G. G. Isaacs has refused to pay the said alimony and comply with the terms of said decree of January 11, 1909, aforesaid, and that there remains now unpaid on account of said temporary alimony the sum of $510, with interest thereon from the date hereof, it is therefore adjudged, ordered, and decreed that complainant recover against defendant the said sum of $510, with interest thereon from the date hereof, and her costs about the prosecution of this suit in this behalf expended * * *—and the decree further directed that, unless the sum decreed were paid within 30 days, H. A. Routh should sell the property in the bill and proceedings mentioned, or a sufficient part thereof, at public outcry at the front door of the courthouse of Russell county, at Lebanon, to satisfy and discharge the said sum of $510, with interest, and the costs of the suit, and the sum of $150 decreed to be paid as attorney's fee for the complainant, and all of the unpaid alimony due and unpaid at the time of the sale, under the terms of the decree of February 4, 1910.

Such was the condition of affairs when G. G. Isaacs, in a supplemental answer to the cross-bill filed by Minnie L. Isaacs in the Russell county suit, appeared with what seems to be the transcript of the record of a suit in the circuit court of Harlan county, Ky., from which we gather that on or about March 21, 1910, George G. Isaacs, claiming to be a resident of and domiciled in Harlan county, Ky., filed his petition, setting forth his marriage with the defendant, Minnie L. Isaacs, that she had abandoned and deserted him, and had been guilty of adultery with certain persons, one of whom is named in the petition. An amended petition was filed setting out his case more at large. The defendant was cited to appear, and did appear by counsel, and filed her answer, in which she denies that the plaintiff ever had any residence in the state of Kentucky, denies all charges of abandonment and adultery made against her, sets forth the proceedings in the circuit court of Wise county; and in fact, we may say, she puts in issue every allegation of the petition, with the result that the Harlan county court entered a judgment dissolving the bond of matrimony theretofore existing between the plaintiff and defendant and restoring the plaintiff, George G. Isaacs, to all the rights and privileges of an unmarried person, and further adjudging that "the parties hereto, and each of them, are ordered and directed to restore to the other all property not disposed of at the commencement of this action which they may have obtained, directly or indirectly, from or through the other, during marriage, in consideration or by reason thereof."

On December 12, 1910, in the circuit court of Russell county, the cases of S. F. Isaacs, Complainant, v. G. G. Isaacs, Defendant, and Minnie L. Isaacs, Complainant, v. G. G. Isaacs and Others, Defendants, on cross-bill, were brought on to be heard together, upon depositions taken and filed in the cause, and upon the supplemental answer of Isaacs to the cross-bill, upon the exhibit of Harlan circuit court proceedings filed with the answer, to the filing of which supplemental answer Minnie L. Isaacs objected and filed exceptions, and upon the agreement of counsel representing all parties in interest. Thereupon the court, without passing upon the objection of Minnie L. Isaacs to the filing of the supplemental answer, or to the validity of the plaintiff's judgment asserted in the original bill, or to the validity of the decree for alimony, referred the case to a commissioner to ascertain and report "what land the said G. G. Isaacs is now seized of, subject to the liens asserted against him in this cause, what of the lands have been sold that are set forth and described in complainant's bill since the original bill was filed in this cause, and to whom sold and for what purpose, and upon what debts, if any, what said land brought, and what purchase money has been paid, and to whom paid, and rental value of all lands now owned by the said G. G. Isaacs in the counties of Russell and Wise, whether or not there are any unpaid taxes thereon, and all liens of all character against the said G. G. Isaacs, together with what land he owns subject to said liens."

On the 17th of April, 1911, the commissioner in chancery filed the report called for in that decree. To this report Minnie L. Isaacs excepted, because it reports against G. G. Isaacs a judgment alleged to have been confessed at the February term, 1909, of the circuit court of Russell county, and the charge made by exceptant in her answer and cross-bill that this judgment was confessed for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding her in the collection of the amounts decreed in her favor by the circuit court of Wise county is reiterated.

This exception was overruled by the circuit court, and its decree in that respect is hereby affirmed. The evidence adduced in the record is insufficient to establish the charge of fraud.

The report was excepted to also by S. F. Isaacs and G. G. Isaacs, because the commissioner, as lien No. 2, reports the judgment in the circuit court of Wise county for the sum of $50 a month from the 11th day of January, 1909, and the further sum of $200, with interest from the 4th day of February, 1910, subject to certain credits stated in the report. This lien is excepted to: First, because it has been paid; and, second, because the decree under which it was asserted has been set aside and annulled. These exceptions the decree appealed from sustained, but no reason is assigned in the decree for the action of the court.

We are unable to discover in the record evidence that the decrees in favor of the appellant in the divorce suit have ever been paid and satisfied to her.

The next ground of exception is because the decree under which said lien is asserted has been set aside and annulled. The exception refers, we presume, to the proceedings in the circuit court of Harlan county, Ky. Whatever may have been the effect of the decree of that court upon the personal status of the parties, plaintiff and defendant, we shall not undertake to inquire or decide. Let it be conceded that while the Virginia court only went so far as to grant a mere separation—a divorce from bed and board and not from the bonds of marriage—the Kentucky decree rightfully, under the circumstances and proofs before it, went further and dissolved the marriage theretofore existing between the parties. It can in no wise, we think, affect the rights of property established by the courts of this state, which had full jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter of the suit.

We are of opinion, therefore, that notwithstanding the proceedings and judgment in the circuit court of Harlan county, Ky., the decrees of the circuit courts of Wise and Russell counties with respect to the alimony awarded Mrs. Isaacs and the counsel fees decreed to be paid to her attorneys remained in full force and effect, and that the exception filed by S. F. and G. G. Isaacs to lien No. 2, as reported by the commissioner should have been overruled.

That the lien, to the extent that it is reported by the commissioner in favor of Mrs. Minnie L. Isaacs, is a valid and subsisting one we have no doubt; and we are not prepared to say that the chancery court, having acquired jurisdiction over the subject-matter and over the parties in the Wise county suit, and having granted a divorce from bed and board and fixed the permanent alimony of Mrs. Isaacs at $50 a month during her life, does not override and take precedence of the judgment confessed by G. G. Isaacs after the institution of the suit and the entry of the decrees of the 11th of January, 1909, and of February 4, 1910. The question is one of great interest and importance, and should only be decided after full investigation by counsel and the court. We shall therefore content ourselves for the present with reversing the decree appealed from, in so far as it sustains the exceptions taken by S. F. and G. G. Isaacs, and will enter a decree to that effect, and directing the circuit court to refer the case to a commissioner to ascertain and report what amount is due for alimony and suit money upon a statement of the decree upon the basis heretofore considered by the commissioner in his report, and what amount would be due as alimony and suit money if the court should be of opinion that the monthly installments of alimony accrued and accruing under the decrees heretofore entered in the divorce suit constitute a primary charge upon all the real estate of G. G. Isaacs within the jurisdiction of the court.

1. TAXATION (§ 319*)—ASSESSMENT—IRREGULARITIES.

One whose property is liable to assessment for taxes may not evade payment for errors, omissions, or irregularities in the assessment thereof which do not prejudice his rights.

Error to Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Proceeding by the Bridgewater Manufacturing Company against one Funkhouser, as Commissioner of the Revenue. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Conrad & Conrad, of Harrisonburg, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General, for defendant in error.

HARRISON, J. This proceeding was instituted in the circuit court of Rockingham county by the Bridgewater Manufacturing Company to have corrected an alleged erroneous assessment of taxes imposed upon it, which relief was denied by the circuit court.

The record shows that the complainant is a corporation, with its chief office and place of business located in Bridgewater, Rockingham county. The chief business of the company is the operation of two flour mills and one woolen mill at Bridgewater. This company paid for the year 1912 the assessments collectible through the Corporation Commission, but did not report anything and was not assessed with anything on the personal property assessment books for that year. At the November term of the circuit court, a special grand jury was impaneled to examine the books of assessment as required by section 578 of the Code of 1904. Among the persons summoned before the grand jury was the manager of the complainant company, who informed the jury that the total running capital of the company invested in its business as of July 1, 1912, was $16,708; that of this sum $14,000 was borrowed money; that the company could not tell what amount it had in its business as running capital as of February 1, 1912, but that it was not less than it was on July 1, 1912. Thereupon the grand jury directed the commissioner of the revenue for Ashby district, in which the company and its business was located, to assess the company for taxation with $16,708, the amount it had in its business as running capital during the year 1912. The aggregate tax imposed upon this assessment was $229.64, being $58.45 for state purposes, $66.81 for county purposes, and $104.38 for district purposes.

[1] The complainants make several technical objections to the time and method of this assessment, insisting that it was not made according to law. These objections are without merit. The underlying principle in such cases is that a person whose property is liable to assessment for taxes shall not be permitted to evade payment of his just proportion of the public burden by any errors, omissions or irregularities that do not prejudice his rights. Stevenson v. Henkle, 100 Va. 591, 595, 42 S. E. 672; Yellow Poplar Co. v. Thompson, 108 Va. 612, 62 S. E. 858; Coles v. Jamerson, 112 Va. 311, 71 S. E. 618.

It is clear from the record that the objections are not well taken and that the complainant suffered no prejudice from the method of assessing the taxes it now seeks to avoid.

[2] There is no foundation for the contention that the law does not tax the capital employed in the business of a miller or other manufacturer. That such capital is taxed clearly appears from schedule C, section 8, of the tax bill, Code, p. 2193.

[3] Upon the merits of this controversy, the complainant contends that under subsection 3 of section 8, schedule C of the tax bill, Code, p. 2195, the capital taxed is the original capital paid in by the shareholders on the purchase of their stock, less the amount invested in real estate and the money borrowed by the company to be used in conducting its business. This position cannot be sustained. The nominal capitalization of the company which is divided into shares and sold or distributed to shareholders does not necessarily bear any relation or proportion to the actual amount of capital used in the business. A corporation may and often is doing an enormous business with a vast capital employed, although its stockholders have paid in little or nothing. The capital stock of a company must be clearly distinguished from the amount of capital invested in its business, or the amount of property possessed by it. 1 Cook on Corporations, § 8.

The third and fourth subsections of section 8, schedule C, of the tax bill are as follows:

"Third. Capital of incorporated joint-stock companies not otherwise taxed; and when all of such capital is taxed by the state of Virginia, the shares of the stock in the hands of individual shareholders shall not be further taxed for state purposes; but real estate belonging to such companies shall not be held to be capital, but shall be listed and taxed as property, and not as capital.

"Fourth. Capital of individuals invested, used or employed in any trade or business not otherwise taxed. Moneys and credits actively used and employed in carrying on the trade or business; materials, goods, wares and merchandise on hand, and all solvent bonds, demands, or claims, made or contracted in the course of business during the preceding year, shall be held to be capital in such trade or business, and shall not be taxed otherwise than as such capital; but real estate shall not be listed as such capital, but shall be assessed and taxed as other specific property."

Subsections 2, 3, and 4 of section 8 of the tax bill each deals with capital; subsection 4 defining the term "capital" to be investments "used or employed in any trade or business not otherwise taxed. Moneys and credits actively used and employed in carrying on the trade or business; materials, goods, wares and merchandise on hand, and all solvent bonds, demands or claims made or contracted in the course of business, during the preceding year, shall be held to be capital in such trade or business, and shall not be taxed otherwise than as such capital; but real estate shall not be listed as such capital, but shall be assessed and taxed as other specific property."

The term "capital" is found in two other sections of the tax bill—that relating to merchants' licenses (Code, p. 2220), and in the section relating to oyster packers' licenses (Code, p. 2222)—and in each of these sections the foregoing definition of "capital" is repeated. Subsections 2, 3, and 4 of section 8 of the tax bill appear together, and in the last the term "capital," which is used in each, is defined. There being nothing in the context to show a contrary intention, it would seem to be clear that the meaning of "capital," as defined in subsection 4, was intended to apply also to capital as used in the preceding subsections 2 and 3.

It is a rule of construction that, when the same word is used in different parts of the same statute, the presumption is that it was used in the same sense throughout the statute, unless a contrary intention clearly appears. Postal Tel. Co. v. Farmville, etc., 96 Va. 661, 664, 32 S. E. 468.

To say that the meaning of "capital" as defined in subsection 4, applied only to individuals would be to hold that the General Assembly intended to impose a less tax on corporations than on individuals for carrying on the same business. The provisions of the tax bill under consideration furnish no ground for such a conclusion. There is no difference between a business as conducted by a corporation and the same business as conducted by an individual that would warrant any different meaning to be given to the term "capital" in the two cases. Any such discrimination would be a violation of the requirement of the Constitution that "all property, except as hereinafter provided, shall be taxed; all taxes whether state, local or municipal, shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects." Va. Const. art. 13, § 168 (Code 1904, p. cclxii).

It seems clear that the Legislature intended that the meaning given by it to the term "capital," in subsection 4, should apply to corporations as well as to individuals, and that it did not mean to limit the taxable capital of corporations to the original input of the shareholders on the purchase of their stock.

Both subsections 3 and 4 of section 8 of the tax bill provide that real estate shall not be held to be capital, but shall be listed and taxed as property. There is, however, no warrant in the statutes for the contention that, in arriving at the subject of taxation, the complainant is only liable for taxes upon the net balance of capital after deducting the money borrowed by the company to be employed in conducting its business. Whether or not such a deduction is permissible rests entirely with the Legislature, and is to be determined by reference to the revenue laws. We find but one instance in which by express provision of the statute the deduction of debts is allowed. This occurs in schedule C, section 8, of the tax bill (Code, pp. 2193, 2194), where in taxing bonds, notes, and other evidences of debt, it is provided that there shall be deducted from such choses in action certain indebtedness of the taxpayer. In the section relating to merchants' licenses (Code, p. 2220), there might perhaps be an implied allowance arising from the use of the word "net." Neither of those instances have any application, however, to the case under consideration, as to which the Legislature has made no provision for any deduction whatever. Ordinarily and in common parlance, the word "capital," when used in reference to commerce or trade, including manufacturing, signifies the money and other property adventured in the business. 6 Cyc. 347; 1 Words & Phrases, 954. As said by the learned judge of the circuit court, when used in this sense, it can make no difference whether the capital, or part of it, is borrowed or not. It is none the less capital of the user, and employed for his profit and at his risk. The statute, as already seen, defines what shall constitute capital in any trade or business, and provides that the specifications made shall not be taxed otherwise than as capital. We would be no more justified in reading into the statute a deduction of indebtedness against these specifications constituting capital than we would be in making a like allowance against the value of land or chattel property.

It is illustrated by the evidence in the present case that large business enterprises are often carried on chiefly, and sometimes wholly, with a borrowed working capital, and if this indebtedness, whether temporary or permanent, is to be deducted in ascertaining the capital for taxation, such enterprises would escape their just share of the burdens of government, though they were actually earning large profits. There is no reason why such a discrimination should be made in favor of manufacturers and others falling in the same class, and there is nothing in the statutes to justify the conclusion that any such favor was intended. The lawmaking power alone must determine whether such an allowance shall be made or not in ascertaining the just amount of taxable property, and, if made, against what forms of property the deduction shall be allowed and to what extent. As against the capital employed by the complainant in its business, the lawmaking power has provided for no deduction of its indebtedness, and the idea that it intended to do so is negatived by the fact that, in the same statute, a deduction is expressly allowed in taxing another and different form of property. Expressio unius exclusio alterius est.

There is no error in the judgment complained of, and it is affirmed.

Affirmed.

1. EQUITY (§ 226*)—PLEADING—OBJECTIONS TO BILL—MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

The court should dismiss a bill for multifariousness on its own motion, though not objected to on that ground by defendant, so that it was immaterial that an objection of multifariousness was made by only one of defendants.

2. EQUITY (§ 148*)—BILL—"MULTIFARIOUSNESS."

"Multifariousness" in a bill means the improper joining therein of distinct and independent matters, as the union of several unconnected matters against one defendant or the demand of several distinct and independent matters against several defendants.

3. EQUITY (§ 148*)—BILL—MULTIFARIOUSNESS—INDEPENDENT CLAIMS.

The bill alleged that B. owned a 60-acre tract which he conveyed to the predecessor in title of complainant's father from whom complainant ultimately derived title by a deed recorded prior to January 1, 1901, and that the land was improperly assessed for taxes against complainant's father for the year 1901 and was sold for taxes claimed to be due from the father, and that defendant lumber company became the purchaser under a tax deed made by the clerk. The bill further alleged that defendant D. on September 18, 1908, filed an ex parte petition under the statute providing for proving recorded papers before a commissioner, to set up title in himself to the 60 acres under a deed from B. and, by intermediate conveyances, to defendant D. by conveyance dated June 28, 1908, and that none of such deeds were intended to include the 60-acre tract owned by complainant, and the prayer was that the lumber company, defendant D., and others be made parties defendant and a decree entered declaring the tax deed to the lumber company void, and an order entered restraining defendant D. from proceeding further in his petition before the commissioner. Held, that the bill was demurrable as multifarious, as joining distinct claims against several defendants.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County.

Suits by one Justus and others against W. L. Dennis and against the W. M. Ritter Lumber Company. Decree for complainant, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

S. M. B. Coulling, of Tazewell, M. O. Litz, of Welch, and J. W. Flannagan, Jr., of Grundy, for appellants. Chase & Daugherty and A. A. Skeen, all of Clintwood, for appellees.

KEITH, P. For the purposes of this case the averments of the bill may be stated as follows: That Daniel Blankenship was the owner of a tract of 60 acres of land, in the county of Buchanan, which he conveyed by deed to one of the predecessors in title of J. L. Justus; that by intermediate conveyances from divers grantors the title to this land was vested in J. L. Justus, the father of complainant, who by his deed conveyed it to Melvin Justus and his brother, Ephraim Justus; and that by proceedings in a chancery suit this land was sold and conveyed to John C. McCoy by J. H. Stinson, a special commissioner, and by McCoy's deed title ultimately vested in the complainant, Melvin Justus, whose deed went to record prior to the 1st of January, 1901; that the land was improperly assessed for taxation against J. L. Justus, father of complainant, for the year 1901; and that by proceedings, which need not be specifically stated, it was sold for taxes alleged to be due by J. L. Justus, the Ritter Lumber Company became the purchaser, and a deed was made to it by Joseph Hibbits, the clerk.

Without going into details, we will content ourselves with the statement that the averments of the bill make out a case for relief against the Ritter Lumber Company, and that if those averments were established by proof the deed from the clerk should be set aside as improperly constituting a cloud upon complainant's land.

The bill goes on then to state that W. L. Dennis, on the 18th of September, 1908, filed an ex parte petition before R. E. Williams, commissioner, acting under sections 3340 and 3341 of the Code, to set up title in himself to the 60 acres of land derived by complainant, as aforesaid, from Daniel Blankenship; that W. L. Dennis claims title under a deed of trust from Daniel Blankenship to J. H. Stinson, trustee, dated February 27, 1894, and recorded the following day, a deed from J. H. Stinson, trustee, to J. F. Barnes, and by deed from J. F. Barnes and her husband to W. L. Dennis, dated June 23, 1903. The bill alleges that none of these deeds included or intended to include the 60-acre tract of land owned by him, and, if the averments of the bill be true, a case for relief is made by the plaintiff against W. L. Dennis.

The prayer of the bill is that the Ritter Lumber Company, W. L. Dennis, J. L. Justus, and Ephraim Justus be made parties defendant; that a decree may be entered vacating and declaring void the deed from Joseph Hibbits, clerk, to the Ritter Lumber Company, for the reasons hereinbefore set out; and that an order may be entered restraining the said W. L. Dennis from proceeding any further with his petition before Commissioner Williams.

We have, then, a bill which sets out the plaintiff's title to a 60-acre tract of land, which he seeks to protect from the claims of the Ritter Lumber Company under a tax deed, and from W. L. Dennis, who is proceeding to establish title in himself to this tract of land by proceedings before a commissioner by virtue of the statute hereinbefore referred to.

The bill was demurred to as being multifarious; the demurrer was overruled; the defendants answered; depositions were taken and proofs filed; and the court, by the decree which is appealed from, granted the relief sought, vacated the deed from Joseph Hibbits, clerk, and restrained Dennis from proceeding any further with his petition before Commissioner Williams.

The first error assigned is that the demurrer to the bill was overruled, and the appellee contends that the charge of multifariousness was not set forth with sufficient clearness as a ground of demurrer by the Ritter Lumber Company and was not relied upon by W. L. Dennis; in the circuit court Dennis and the Ritter Lumber Company being the only appellants.

[1] This contention need not be passed upon, as the charge of multifariousness made by the Ritter Lumber Company is sufficient in form and, if well founded, is fatal, whether united in by its coappellant or not, for, as we shall see, the authorities hold that it is the duty of the court, of its own motion, to dismiss a multifarious bill, although not objected to on that ground by the parties defendant.

We have gone very far in sustaining bills where this charge has been made, but in the present case we are constrained to the conclusion that we must either hold the bill to be multifarious or declare that this ground of demurrer can no longer be availed of in this jurisdiction.

In Seefried v. Clarke, 113 Va. 365, 74 S. E. 204, the most recent expression of opinion by this court upon this subject, it was held that in a bill for partition "the courts may set aside a deed to one of the parties of a part of the land to be divided, either because the grantor had no power to make the deed or because of his mental incapacity; and that the fact that both grounds for setting aside the deed are alleged in the bill for partition does not render the bill multifarious. Such a bill attains the desired end in a way convenient to all concerned and does no serious injury to any one of them." A number of cases decided by this court are there considered, and the question of convenience was carried as far as we deem it proper to extend it.

[2] In Dunn v. Dunn, 26 Gratt. (67 Va.) 295, section 271 of Story's Eq. Pleading is quoted and approved as follows: "A bill should not be what is technically termed multifarious, for, if it is so, it is demurrable and may be dismissed by the court of its own accord, even if not objected to by the defendant. By multifariousness in a bill is meant the improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters and thereby confounding them; as, for example, the uniting in one bill of several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected against one defendant, or the demand of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants, in the same bill. In the latter case the proceeding would be oppressive, because it would tend to load each defendant with an unnecessary burden of costs by swelling the pleadings with the statement of the several claims of the other defendants, with which he has no connection."

[3] This statement of the law is peculiarly apposite in the case under consideration, for the very evil which the quotation points out is well illustrated by the magnitude of the record before us. The claims of the Ritter Lumber Company and of W. L. Dennis are wholly separate and distinct. They have no sort of connection the one with the other. The case against each is sufficiently stated in the bill to entitle the plaintiff to relief if established by proof.

In Washington City Savings Bank v. Thornton, 83 Va. 157, 2 S. E. 193, it is said to be impossible to lay down any rule, applicable to all cases, as to what constitutes multifariousness. "It is well settled, however, that a bill is demurrable in which are united several distinct rights, each sufficient, as stated, to sustain a bill against one defendant, or in which there is a demand of several matters, distinct in their nature, against several defendants, who are unconnected in interest and liability."

The decisions of this court bearing upon the subject are fully collated in Seefried v.

Clarke, supra, and no further citation of authority is deemed necessary.

The decree of the circuit court must, for the reasons stated, be reversed; and this court will render such decree as the circuit court should have entered.

Error to Circuit Court, Wood County.

Action by the Cable Company against J. W. Mathers and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

E. L. Coleman, of Corpus Christi, Tex., for plaintiff in error. F. H. McGregor and Kreps & Russell, all of Parkersburg, for defendants in error.

WILLIAMS, J. This writ of error is to a judgment of the circuit court of Wood county rendered, on appeal from a justice, in favor of a number of attaching creditors of A. L. Barker, and against the Cable Company, a corporation, claimant of the property attached. After the suits were brought, and attachments levied upon certain organs and pianos in a building in the city of Parkersburg, formerly occupied by said Barker, the Cable Company appeared before another justice, and claimed the attached property. The justice decided the question in favor of the Cable Company, and directed the constable to turn the property over to it. Defendants appealed the cases to the circuit court, and, the issue in each case being the same, the parties agreed to submit all of them to the jury to be tried together, which was done.

[1] But, before passing to a discussion of the merits of the case, it is necessary to determine a preliminary question raised in brief of counsel for defendant in error, which is whether bill of exceptions No. 1 sufficiently identifies the evidence to make it a part of the record. It is what is commonly called a skeleton bill, and was signed by the judge in vacation, within 30 days after the adjournment of the term, and was made a part of the record by a vacation order. It certifies, in part, as follows, viz.: "All the proceedings on said trial, and all the evidence considered by the court, were reduced to writing, and are embodied in the transcript made by John T. Harris, official stenographer of the court, and referred to therein, and styled 'Transcript of Testimony,' and filed in these causes, and all the said rulings and decisions of the court, and all of the exceptions taken and contained in said transcript of testimony, are made part of the record and this bill of exceptions, with the same effect and intent as though the same were fully and at large herein copied as a part of this bill of exceptions No. 1." The words "transcript of testimony," by which the transcript of evidence is identified, do not appear at the beginning of the evidence; but instead of those words are the words "Testimony on Behalf of the Plaintiff." Then following this heading, and between it and the certificate of the official stenographer is found the testimony of witnesses, which appears to have been taken in the case. We do not think the omission of the words "transcript of testimony" is fatal, because the stenographer's transcript is sufficiently identified by its character and by reference in the bill of exceptions to the stenographer's certificate appended to the transcript. From the character of the evidence we see that it applies to this case, and the judge's certificate designates it as having been reduced to writing by John T. Harris, official stenographer of the court. We find, at the end of the transcript, a certificate signed by John T. Harris, as official stenographer, styling this case, and certifying that the evidence was taken in the trial of it. We are morally certain that the transcript is the same mentioned in the judge's certificate, or skeleton bill of exceptions, and therefore hold that it is properly a part of the record. Marshall v. Stalnaker, 70 W. Va. 394, 74 S. E. 48; Darnell v. Wilmoth, 69 W. Va. 704, 72 S. E. 1023.

It is also urged that certain other papers appearing in the record, following the certificate of the official stenographer, are not parts of the record. They are what purport to be copies from the docket of the justice who tried the attachment suits, out of which the present suit respecting the ownership of the attached property and its liability for A. L. Barker's debts grew. The justice testified as a witness in this case, and identified these papers; it appears that they were offered, as parts of the record, in the trial of this case in the circuit court. The marks these papers bear, as "J. H. R. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4," etc., correspond with the designation the witness gave to them in his testimony. This, we think, is quite sufficient to identify them as copies of the same papers admitted at the trial. It was not necessary to read them to the jury, because they were official papers, and did not present a question to be determined by the jury.

[2, 3] The court permitted certain depositions that had been taken and read before the justice of the peace to be read as evidence on the appeal, over objection of defendant, and this is cross-assigned as error. These depositions are identified by E. L. Coleman, in his testimony, as the same that were read at the trial of the case before the justice. Therefore, assuming that they were duly taken and properly certified, they were admissible as evidence on the appeal. Section 168, c. 50, Code, requires the justice within 20 days to transmit the depositions, together with a transcript of his docket, to the clerk of the circuit court. For what purpose are the depositions to be transmitted, if not to be used as evidence in the trial in the circuit court? If they were objected to on some ground that could be cured by a retaking, it was then too late to object. Objection on such grounds must be made before trial begins. Supply & Contracting Co. v. Consolidated Light & Ry. Co., 42 W. Va. 583, 28 S. E. 189.

[4, 5] There is no proof that A. L. Barker was ever at any time the owner of the property in question, and the proof is conclusive that it was owned by the Cable Company. But defendants' counsel contend that said Barker was a "trader," and dealt with the property as his own in such manner as to make it liable for his debts. The case turns altogether upon the question whether Barker was a trader within the meaning of that term as used in section 13, c. 100, Code 1906. The property had been consigned to him by plaintiff for sale on a commission. He rented a storeroom in Parkersburg, and put up his sign over the door, which read, "A. L. Barker, Pianos and Organs." No other sign was displayed in or about the building, and there was nothing to inform the public that he was not sole owner of the property which he was advertising to sell. There is no proof that he carried any other stock for sale than the pianos and organs consigned to him by plaintiff. The contract between him and plaintiff provided that the pianos and organs were to be held on consignment until sold, and such sale approved and accepted by the plaintiff. He was also to keep the property insured for the benefit of plaintiff, and to guarantee all notes taken in payment of goods sold. The contract was not recorded in Wood county. Barker appears to have become a resident of Ohio at the time the attachments were levied. It is proven that he, two or three times, took old organs in part payment for new ones; that, on two occasions, he received horses in part payment for pianos or organs; and that sometimes he received checks payable to his own order for them. But it does not appear what disposition he made of the property taken in exchange, or that he was engaged in the business of bartering. His chief business, and the only business which he advertised, was apparently selling pianos and organs; neither was he a licensed auctioneer or commission merchant. So far as it appears from the record, he bought no goods for sale, and sold no other goods than the pianos and organs received by him for sale from plaintiff. In view of these facts, he was not a trader within the meaning of section 13, c. 100, Code, which reads as follows: "If any person shall transact business as a trader, with the addition of the words 'factor,' 'agent,' 'and company,' or 'and Co.' and fail to disclose the name of his principal or partner by a sign in letters, easy to read, placed conspicuously at the house wherein such business is transacted, and also by a notice published for two weeks in a newspaper (if any) printed in the town or county wherein the same is transacted, or if any person transact such business in his own name, without any such addition, all the property, stock, choses in action, acquired or used in such business, shall, as to the creditors of any such person, be liable for the debts of such person. This section shall not apply to a person transacting such business under a license to him as an auctioneer or commission merchant." The statute is designed to make the property of another, in the hands of a trader, liable for his debts, when such trader fails to comply with certain requirements, none of which appear to have been observed by Barker in this case. The statute is therefore in derogation of the common-law rights of property, and should receive a strict construction.

[8, 7] If Barker was not a trader, within the strict definition of that term, the property of the Cable Company, which was consigned to him only for sale, is not liable for his debts. But, if he was a trader then it is liable. Webster defines "trader" as: "One who engages in trade or commerce; one who makes a business of buying and selling or of barter; a merchant." The Century Dictionary defines the word thus: "One who is engaged in trade or commerce; one whose business is buying and selling, or barter; one whose vocation is to buy and sell again personal property for gain." There is no proof that Barker bought; he only sold personal property. To constitute him a trader, in the sense in which that term is used in the statute, it was essential that he should have been both a buyer and a seller for profit. That he sometimes received other property in part payment for pianos or organs sold by him is not sufficient to make his case an exception to the rule. He was not in the business of bartering.

The facts in this case are very similar to the facts in Brown Manufacturing Co. v. Deering, 35 W. Va. 255, 13 S. E. 383, in which it was held that: "A party whose entire business consists in selling agricultural implements, wagons, etc., as agent for the manufacturer thereof, receiving a commission for his services in disposing of the same, cannot be regarded either as a trader or commission merchant."

The term "trader" has been similarly construed in the following cases, viz.: In re New York, etc., Co. (U. S. D. C.) 98 Fed. 711; In re Tontine Surety Co. (D. C.) 116 Fed. 401.

A. L. Barker not being a trader within the meaning of section 13, c. 100, Code, it follows that the court erred in refusing to give plaintiff's instructions Nos. 2, 6, 7, and 8, and also erred in refusing to set aside the verdict, and grant plaintiff a new trial.

The judgment is reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 269*)—ACTION TO SET ASIDE—PLEADING.

A fraudulent conveyance will not be set aside unless attacked by proper pleading, supported by proof. The court will not set it aside on proof alone.

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 559*)—INSOLVENCY—CONFESSION OF BILL—EFFECT.

Creditors of an insolvent corporation, who suffer a bill to be taken for confessed, filed against them and the corporation by its stockholders to wind up its affairs, averring that a deed of trust upon its property creates a lien thereon in favor of a certain creditor, thereby admit the validity of such lien.

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 557*)—INSOLVENCY—PLEADING.

Unsecured creditors who have not attacked such lien for fraud, by proper pleading putting it in issue, cannot do so before a commissioner to whom the case has been referred to ascertain and report the debts and their priorities.

An answer, tendered after a final decree has been rendered upon bill taken for confessed, is properly rejected when not accompanied by affidavit showing good cause for delay.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.

Action by J. F. McDonald and others against the McDonald Planing Mill Company and others. From the judgment the Federal Lumber Company and others appeal. Affirmed.

C. E. Morris and W. B. Casey, both of Wheeling, for appellants. Edward F. Horstmann and Noyes & Ritz, all of Wheeling, for appellees.

WILLIAMS, J. J. F. McDonald, Charles Booth, Edward Feinler, John B. Rose, and J. L. McDonald, being the owners of all the capital stock of the McDonald Planing Mill Company, brought this suit to wind up its affairs, alleging its insolvency. The corporation and its creditors were made parties defendant. On the 9th of December, 1909, the court appointed a receiver to take charge of its property and collect outstanding claims due it; and on the 13th of April, 1910, it referred the cause to a master commissioner, to ascertain and report its debts and their priorities and the amount of money in the hands of the receiver. The commissioner listed debts, aggregating $17,545.47, and reported that there were no priorities among them, and found that there was in the receiver's hands the sum of $9,682.52. The Germania Half-Dollar Savings Bank, one of the defendants, excepted to the report because the commissioner had reported its debt of $2,332.37, as a debt of the general class, and not as a lien upon the company's property, as it claimed it was. The court heard the cause upon the report and exceptions thereto, on the 11th of February, 1911, and sustained the bank's exceptions, and decreed its debt as a lien of the second class; a debt of $225 in favor of the Wheeling Terminal Railroad Company, as to which there is no controversy, having been ascertained by the court to be the first lien. From that decree a number of the creditors, whose debts were placed in the general class, have appealed, assigning as error the sustaining of said exceptions. The bank's debt was secured by a deed of trust executed in 1903, upon the McDonald Planing Mill Company's property, consisting of machinery and lumber then on its yards, which, in the nature of the company's business, was constantly changing. The lumber constituted its largest asset. Following the case of Gilbert v. Peppers, 65 W. Va. 355, 64 S. E. 361, 86 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1181, holding that a deed of trust upon a stock of merchandise kept for sale which allowed the grantor to retain possession and continue to sell and replenish the stock, was fraudulent as to creditors, the commissioner held that the deed of trust to secure the debt due the aforesaid bank was fraudulent and void, and reported the bank's debt in the general class.

[1, 2] But no question of fraud was raised by the pleadings. It was therefore not presented to the court for decision. The case was not referred to the commissioner to enable defendants to establish a fraud; nor, indeed, could it have been properly referred for that purpose. The question of fraud not having been presented by pleadings and passed on by the lower court, we have no right to review it on this appeal. Therefore we do not say whether the deed of trust is in fact fraudulent. All we do say is that it is valid between the parties, and good also as to creditors, until it is attacked, and that no creditor has yet assailed it. The bill admits the debt and avers that it is secured by a deed of trust on the company's property and that it is the first lien thereon. All of the appellants, 13 in number, were made parties defendant to the bill, eo nomine, except one, the Flint Irving & Stoner Company, and were served with process, and failed to appear. The bill, as to them, was properly taken for confessed. In effect they have admitted the truth of the averment in the bill. An answer expressly admitting it could have no greater effect against them. A deed of trust, though fraudulent in fact, will not be set aside for the benefit of creditors who do not attack it. In Bumgardner v. Ham, 92 Va. 188, 23 S. E. 229, a case wherein some of the creditors of the grantor attacked the conveyance made by him, on the ground that it was voluntary and therefore fraudulent as to existing creditors; and others, on the ground that it was fraudulent in fact, the statute of limitations having been pleaded, the court found that the deed was fraudulent in fact, but more than five years having elapsed before the bringing of the suit, which was a bar to the right of attack on the ground of voluntariness, it set it aside as to those creditors who had alleged and proved fraud in fact, but refused to set it aside as to those who had alleged that it was only voluntary. That court there applied a well-recognized rule of practice, which is that a court will grant relief only when both pleadings and proof justify it; it will not do so on proof alone.

[3] Appellants here sought to raise before the commissioner a question not presented by the pleadings, a question of cross-relief between codefendants. Plaintiffs were not interested in it. The bill simply asked that the business of the insolvent corporation be wound up and its assets applied to the payment of its debts. Whether some of its creditors should be paid in full and others only in part, or whether the assets should be applied to the debts of all, pro rata, is immaterial to them. It is purely a question relating to the granting of cross-relief between codefendants, which was held in Dudley v. Buckley, 64 W. Va. 630, 70 S. E. 376, could not be done without proper pleadings. The only pleading in this case, is the bill which, for failure of answer, is admittedly true.

[4] Some of the appellants complain because the court refused them right to file answers; and another, who was not a party to the bill, because he was denied the right to file his petition in the suit and be made a party. But the offer to file these pleadings was not made until five days after the decree appealed from was rendered. Defendants were in default, and seem to have offered no excuse therefor. They tendered no affidavits excusing their delay, as the statute requires in such case. Chapter 125, § 3, Code; McLaughlin v. Sayers, 78 S. E. 353. Moreover, the rejected answers are not in the record, and we do not know what they contained. The court may have rejected them because of improper, or insufficient matter. We must assume that they were properly rejected, for error will not be presumed.

For the same reason we cannot see how the court erred in rejecting the petition of Flint Irving & Stoner Company.

The decree will be affirmed.

JUDGMENT (§ 150*)—PLEADING (§ 199*) — OFFICE JUDGMENT—DEMURRER TO DECLARATION.

The defendant in an action at law, in which the office judgment has become final, but as not been entered by the court, may demur to the declaration, notwithstanding the lapse of the statutory period and the finality of the judgment, and, if the demurrer is sustained, formal judgment on the office judgment cannot be entered. In such case, the office judgment becomes a nullity, if the declaration is not amended or cannot be cured by amendment.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 522*)—RECORD—EVIDENCE.

The evidence in an action of debt, dependent upon the same issues of fact as those involved in another action of assumpsit, is made part of the record in the latter by the following agreement filed therein: "The parties hereto agree that the facts in this case are as follows: (Here insert the transcript of the evi-

Robinson, J., dissenting as to point 2.

Error to Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Action by Henry S. Wilson against Samuel W. Shrader. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed and dismissed.

John L. Hechmer, of Grafton, for plaintiff in error. J. Hop Woods, of Philippi, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, P. Henry S. Wilson, suing for the benefit of Samuel V. Woods, instituted his three several actions in debt against Shrader for recovery of the penalty given by section 7 of chapter 79 of the Code against a coterminous landowner for mining coal within five feet of the line of the adjacent owner without his consent in writing, and an action of assumpsit for the recovery of the value of the coal taken out of the adjacent land. Each of the three actions of debt was founded upon a violation of the statute, separate and distinct from those upon which the others rested; there having been three trespasses respecting the same tract of land, or one trespass at three different places. The evidence taken in one case was used in all of them, and there was a judgment for $500 in each of the actions of debt and for $5,000 in the action of assumpsit.

The declarations were all filed at April rules, 1902, and the common orders were confirmed at May rules, 1902, and a writ of inquiry awarded in the assumpsit action. At the May term, 1902, the defendant appeared, and orders were entered purporting to file pleas and counter affidavits, without indicating the character of the pleas; but a paper was filed in each case, bearing the style of the action, and having the form and substance of an affidavit, denying any indebtedness upon the demand or demands stated in the declaration. Nothing further was done until the 29th day of September, 1905, when the plaintiff moved the court to enter judgment for him in each of the three actions of debt, treating the papers filed as pleas, and counter affidavits as being only affidavits, and the judgments as having become final on the last day of the May term of court, 1902, for want of pleas. These motions were overruled, and leave given the defendant to demur to the declarations. On the 2d day of March, 1907, the plaintiff filed an amended declaration in each of the four cases, and sued out process thereon. On the 10th day of May, 1907, the court entertained and sustained demurrers to the original declarations in all of the cases, and overruled demurrers to the amended declarations therein.

[1] The office judgment in the action of assumpsit did not become final on the last day of the May term, 1902, for the case was one in which a writ of inquiry was necessary and proper and had been awarded. In such cases, the office judgment does not become final before execution of the writ of inquiry. Walls v. Zufall & Co., 61 W. Va. 166, 56 S. E. 179.

[2] If the declarations in the actions of debt set forth no causes of action, and were wholly and incurably bad, it is immaterial whether the affidavits filed therein as pleas, or having the double features of pleas and affidavits, can be treated as pleas or not, for there can be no judgment without a declaration. "If a defendant wishes to contest both law and fact, he can at the same time both demur and plead. The court will entertain his demurrer; but it confesses the fact, and his nonappearance further confesses it. If the demurrer is overruled at the first term, he can plead any matter of fact admissible; but, if overruled at a later term, he cannot plead any plea of fact. If the demurrer is held good, and the case is dismissed, the office judgment amounts to nought, and judgment in court is not entered." Bank v. Burdette, 61 W. Va. 636, 638, 57 S. E. 53, 54. This case allows the office judgment to stand pending the test of the sufficiency of the declaration and the process of amendment at the bar of the court. But, if the declaration is bad and not amended, or is incurably bad, the office judgment dies. In Bank v. Burdette, the demurrer had been filed at the first term; but no reason is perceived why it cannot be filed at a later term, provided formal judgment has not been entered. The office judgment, though final under the statute, is not a finished or complete judgment. It is final in the sense of foreclosure of issues of fact; but it must be entered to be complete. A demurrer leaves it standing as to matters of fact, but carries the case over as to the issue of law. The office judgment confers right to a formal judgment at the first term; but, if the plaintiff sees fit to forego this right, the issue of law, or the right to raise it, remains open to the defendant. The office judgment is potentially final, giving right to a complete judgment, if no demurrer is filed before entry thereof, and on a good declaration, if there is a demurrer. No harm can result from this. If there is a demurrer for formal defects in the declaration, an amendment at the bar of the court will cure them, and judgment may then be entered, and if the declaration sets forth no cause of action at all, and is incurably bad, there ought not to be any judgment on it. This construction of the statute makes it work out equitable and just results. The opposite one works an unjust and absurd result in those instances in which no good case can be made on the matter found in the declaration.

[3] Samuel V. Woods, the real plaintiff in these actions, claims the penalties given by the statute, as assignee of Henry S. Wilson, the nominal plaintiff. If the rights of action for the penalty are not assignable, the declarations are wholly and essentially bad. They set forth no causes of action, the benefit of which the assignee can take. A vital inquiry, therefore, is whether penalties under the statute here involved are assignable. Prior to the 8th day of February, 1901, Henry S. Wilson owned a small tract of land containing five acres, in which there was coal, and which he conveyed to Samuel V. Woods on said date. Adjacent thereto lay another tract of land which Geo. C. Lee and wife conveyed to Samuel W. Shrader, by deed dated August 1, 1899, and Shrader by his deed dated March 14, 1901, conveyed it to the Tygarts Valley Coal & Coke Company, a corporation. While Shrader owned the adjacent tract of land, mining operations were conducted on it which extended, at three different points, not only within five feet of the line, but to the line and beyond it into the property owned by Wilson, by reason of which he had rights of action, or at least a right of action, against somebody for the penalty given by the statute. In his deed to Woods, he endeavored to assign these rights of action, as well as one for the coal taken from the land.

The assignability of statutory rights, not all of which are penalties by any means, is said to depend upon the language of the statute conferring them. "If the statute forbids the assignment of a right conferred by it, or if the legislative intent, as shown by the act, is to confer a right strictly personal to the person upon whom it is conferred, then such act is not assignable. In the absence of such express or implied prohibition, the assignability or nonassignability of rights conferred by statute is to be governed by the principles governing the assignability or nonassignability of choses in action in general. Statutory rights giving compensation for property loss suffered are, generally, said to be assignable, whereas, rights to recover penalties and rights given by statute for the redress of personal wrongs are not assignable." 4 Cyc. 28. Obviously the penalty given by the statute here in question is not intended as compensation for coal taken or damage to property. It may be incurred without the taking of any coal from the land of the party entitled to sue. The taking of any coal at all within five feet of the division line, and out of land belonging to the taker himself, inflicts the penalty. The foundation of the right of action, therefore, is not benefit obtained by the defendant from the plaintiff. It rests upon no consideration, nor is it given as compensation for any actual injury. The enactment of it seems to have been nothing more than an exercise of the police power of the state, and the penalty to have been prescribed by way of sanction for the enforcement of the policy declared by the statute. It does not stand in lieu of the right of action for injury to the land by the mining of coal therefrom, or a right of action for the value of coal taken, nor take the place of either. Nothing in the terms of the statute suggests any such consequence or result. It is not a common-law right of action, made assignable by statute, for the statutes giving survival to rights of action, and so impliedly and incidentally making them assignable, contemplate only rights of action founded upon, or growing out of, contracts, such as were enforceable in equity, before the statutes relieved the defect in the common law, so as to permit assignees to sue in the law courts. "The words 'choses in action' mean nothing more and can have no broader signification than the words 'rights of action,' and it has been uniformly held that these latter words, 'rights of action,' only include rights of action founded on contracts, or for injuries to property, and not rights of action for torts, which are purely personal, such as the action for slander, which dies with the person, and never survives to the personal representative." Dillard v. Collins, 25 Grat. (Va.) 343. The right of recovery given by this statute is not a right of action of that sort, for it is neither founded upon contract, nor is it given for injury to property. The statute which gives it is of comparatively recent enactment, and was not in existence at the date of the enactment of the statute legalizing assignment of choses in action. Hence there is no ground for the assumption of legislative intent, in the passage of the older statutes, to make it assignable. In Fraker v. Cullum, 24 Kan. 679, Brewer, J., said: "It cannot justly be said that an action to enforce a forfeiture or recover a penalty is one founded on contract, no matter who is the party chiefly benefited by the recovery." In that case, an effort was made to set off a forfeiture under an act of Congress against a national bank in an action on a note. The claim of right to set off the forfeiture or penalty was based upon the theory that, as the penalty was given by statute, the right of recovery was a right arising out of contract. This theory was utterly repudiated and condemned by the court. Proceeding, Judge Brewer said: "There is, to be sure, an implied obligation resting upon every member of society to break no law, and do no wrong to his neighbor; but this obligation is not the implied contract of which the law books speak as one whose breach gives a cause of action upon contract." The analysis of the statute, its provisions and purposes, and these authorities, deny to the penalty the quality of assignability under the statute imparting it to choses in action. Obviously it is not in any sense a chose in action. It is a mere naked right of action given by statute by way of punishment for a specific unlawful act, an act made unlawful by the statute itself. Such rights of action are not assignable, unless the statute makes them so. In McBratney v. Railroad Co., 17 Hun (N. Y.) 385, the assignability of penalties inflicted upon railroad companies for excessive charges was involved. After citing authorities, the court said: "But it is unnecessary to pursue the subject further; the fact that the statute which creates the penalty gives the right to sue for it to the party paying the excessive fare, and to no one else, seems to lead necessarily to the conclusion that the cause of action cannot be assigned." Such is the character of the statute involved here. It gives the right of action only to the person injured, saying: "If any person violate this section, he shall forfeit five hundred dollars to any person injured thereby who may sue for the same." Construing and interpreting this statute, this court has held that the person injured and entitled to sue is the person who was the owner of the land at the time of the violation of the statute, or a tenant thereof, or any person then having an interest therein. Selvey v. Coal Co., 79 S. E. 658, not yet officially reported; Shinn v. Coal Mining Co., 78 S. E. 104; Mapel v. John, 42 W. Va. 30, 24 S. E. 608, 82 L. R. A. 800, 57 Am. St. Rep. 839. An assignee of such person is clearly not the injured person. He claims not in his own right, but through another, and is not within the terms of the statute. It does not say the person injured or his assignee may sue. It is a highly penal statute, and falls under the rule of strict construction. Such statutes do not include anything beyond their letter, even though within their spirit. Reeves v. Ross, 62 W. Va. 7, 17, 57 S. E. 284. Nothing can be added to their terms even for the plausible purpose of covering what seems to be within their purpose and spirit. The assumption of assignability of this right of action can rest upon nothing other than the further assumption that the Legislature intended the penalty to be paid at all hazards and to make it an asset in the hands of any person that may be able to obtain an assignment of it. This is an assumption founded upon an assumption. Not a word in the statute suggests or intimates such intent on the part of the Legislature. There is no more reason for the assumption in this case than in any other case in which a penalty is inflicted, and the reasons that preclude the assignability of mere personal rights, such as actions for slander, assault, and battery, and other pure torts, obviously apply here. Assignability of such claims encourages litigation and strife. The same principle of public policy forbids the conversion of penalties into commodities or assets. The Legislature failed to make the right assignable, because such action would have been violative of its policy.

[4] In resistance or avoidance of the result foreshadowed by this conclusion, Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450, is relied upon. It says the assignor, in an action brought by one person for the use of another, is the legal plaintiff, and invalidity of the assignment, being immaterial, is not matter of defense. The claim in that case, a judgment, was an assignable one, no matter what sort of a cause of action it arose out of. To apply this doctrine to a nonassignable right would defeat the policy of the law, since it would make every right assignable. Though in such case the assignor is the legal plaintiff, he is not the real nor substantial plaintiff. He is not responsible for costs. Nor can he dismiss or control the action or receive the money. Clarksons v. Doddridge, 14 Grat. (Va.) 42; Tolson v. Elwes, 1 Leigh (Va.) 438.

Upon these principles and conclusions, we are clearly of the opinion that the trial court should have sustained demurrers to the amended declarations in all of the three actions of debt, and that it rightly sustained demurrers to the original declarations therein.

In action of debt No. 1, there was a trial by jury and a verdict, upon which judgment was rendered. Action in debt No. 2 was submitted to the court in lieu of a jury, upon the evidence taken in action No. 1, and the same procedure was had in action of debt No. 3. For the reasons stated, the judgments in all of said three actions will be reversed, the verdict set aside in said action No. 1, the demurrers to the amended declarations in all of them sustained, and the actions dismissed; it appearing that the declarations cannot be so amended as to give the plaintiff a right of action in the capacity in which he sued.

The demurrer to the amended declaration in the action of assumpsit, containing the common counts, including one for money had and received to the use of the plaintiff, and a special count for coal mined from the plaintiff's land, carried away, sold, and converted into money by the defendant, was properly overruled. There is a verbal inaccuracy in the special count; but it relates to form rather than substance. Instead of saying the defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff for such coal, in consideration thereof promised to pay its specified value, the declaration, after stating the facts, says: "The said defendant thereby promised to pay and become liable to the plaintiff," etc. Notwithstanding this departure from the usual form, the count shows how the defendant became indebted and alleges a promise to pay the amount of the indebtedness. It does not omit the essential averment, the promise.

[5] In passing upon the ruling upon the demurrer to the declaration, it became necessary to inquire as to the propriety of the remedy invoked. Ordinarily trespass on the case is the form of action resorted to for injuries to real property; but this is not for injury to the land. Its basis is a right to demand from the defendant money had and received for the use of the plaintiff, and, to recover, it is necessary to trace money or value into the hands of the defendant which in equity and conscience belongs to the plaintiff.

[6] Assumpsit is not the proper form of action for the recovery of damages for a mere wrong. It only lies to recover from the defendant that which is in his hands and belongs to the plaintiff, and he may have such a fund derived from timber severed from the plaintiff's land or coal dug therefrom, as well as from the proceeds of sale of personal property wrongfully taken from the plaintiff. In Powell v. Rees, 2 N. & P. Rep. 571, Lord Denman, C. J., said Lord Mansfield had correctly laid down the distinction, in Hambly v. Trott, Cowp. 371, in the following terms: "There is a fundamental distinction: If it is a sort of injury by which the offender acquires no gain to himself at the expense of the sufferer, as beating or imprisoning a man etc., there the person injured has only a reparation for the delictum in damages, to be assessed by a jury, but where, besides the crime, property is acquired, which benefits the testator, there an action for the value of the property shall survive against the executor. As, for instance, the executor shall not be chargeable for the injury done by his testator in cutting down another man's trees; but, for the benefit arising to his testator for the value or sale of the trees, he shall." In Powell v. Rees, the action of assumpsit was allowed for the value of coal taken by the defendant's decedent from the plaintiff and sold. For further precedents, see Dowds v. Finnegan, 58 Miss. 112, 59 N. W. 2d, 49 Am. St. Rep. 488; Hagaman v. Neitzel, 15 Kan. 383; Evans v. Miller, 58 Miss. 120, 30 Am. Rep. 313.

[7] Denial of right to test the correctness of the court's finding upon the issue of fact s based upon alleged absence of the evidence; the sufficiency of the bill of exceptions being challenged. As has been stated, the evidence in action of debt No. 1 was taken for use in all of the other cases. The agreement for submission of the action in assumpsit to the court in lieu of a jury was in writing, and has been certified by the clerk. An order entered in the action of assumpsit says it came on "to be heard upon the stipulation and agreement of counsel heretofore made, and filed herein, and the proceedings in said action No. 1 now being part hereof thereby." This says not only that the agreement was filed in the cause, but that it made the proceedings in action No. 1 part of the proceedings in the action of assumpsit. The agreement itself says: "The parties hereto agree that the facts in this case are as follows: (Here insert the transcript of the evidence as certified by Henry Garfield Chaney, the official stenographer of his court, as reported in the same styled case, marked 'Debt No. 1,' tried at the September term of this court, 1908.)" The clerk has certified as part of the record of the four causes a certificate or transcript of evidence made by Henry Garfield Chaney in the action of debt No. 1. As the agreement bears date January 11, 1909, and the action of debt had been tried at the September term of court, 1908, the evidence referred to in the agreement as having been transcribed was no doubt in existence at the time, and the agreement identifies it. That agreement calls for a paper entitled "Transcript of the Evidence," and as having been certified by Henry Garfield Chaney, the official stenographer of the court. Turning to it, we find the paper relied upon as the evidence in the case and so certified by the clerk has both of these marks of identification. It is said the agreement relates only to the facts proved; but it calls for insertion of the transcript of the evidence. Hence the parties must have used the word "facts" in the sense of evidence. Aside from this agreement, each of the two bills of exception, made a part of the record by a proper order in action of debt No. 1, refers to a certificate of evidence, and makes it a part thereof, and a paper signed and sealed by the judge is found in the record. It is skeleton in form, and calls for insertion of the plaintiff's evidence as shown by the transcript of the stenographer's notes "hereto attached," and also for the insertion of the defendant's evidence "as shown by the attached transcript of the stenographer's notes." It would be difficult to devise a clearer and more effective method of identification than that of attachment of the paper itself to the paper purporting to adopt it. Though this skeleton paper is not labeled "Certificate of Evidence," it is such in fact. It bears the style of the action, and is signed and sealed by the judge, who certifies in it that "the foregoing is all the evidence that was introduced on the trial of the foregoing case." Bill of exception No. 1 adopts and makes a part of it "the certificate of evidence filed in this case." Bill of exception No. 2 does likewise. These papers clearly bring the evidence into the record.

From what has been said concerning the grounds upon which this action of assumpsit is maintainable, under the circumstances disclosed here, it is obvious that the evidence, to warrant recovery, must go to the extent of proving the defendant got the plaintiff's coal and converted it into money or to his own use in some manner. It is not enough that he owned the adjacent land, and permitted somebody to mine over the line. That the coal was mined out of the plaintiff's land through the Shrader land after Shrader purchased it, and before he sold it, are facts well established by the evidence. But Shrader denies that he did the mining. He says the mine was operated by a copartnership consisting of Eliza J. Shrader, his mother, J. W. Miller, and R. O. Dunn, and he managed the mine for them, and further that he purchased the land and took the title in his own name as trustee for them. According to his testimony, the firm did business under the name of Tygarts Valley Coal Company, and other witnesses say the business was run in that name. He says the articles of copartnership were prepared by the plaintiff's attorney, and the men were paid by check bearing the firm name, and that shipping cards and store orders bore it, as well as a notice at the mouth of the mine. He denies that he was a member of the firm, and that he had any money invested in it, and says he represented the interests of R. O. Dunn and Eliza J. Shrader. He admits that he had an interest through his mother, Eliza J. Shrader, but does not define that interest. At the same time he repeats his denial that he had any interest in the firm. In this connection he says: "Only a small interest, simply managing the company for these people." This answer was followed by the question: "Well, you were a member of the company? A. In a way; yes." His evidence, taken all together, falls short of an admission of membership in the firm as a partner, and there is no other evidence of his membership thereof. That the work was done by a copartnership is established by his testimony. He says the articles were in writing and prepared by the plaintiff's attorney; but the paper was not introduced, nor were its contents shown. At the date of the conveyance by Lee to Shrader the mine was open and running, and its operations were continued, with Shrader in charge of the work, until the copartnership was formed soon afterwards; but no coal is shown to have been taken from the Wilson land before the firm was organized, and Shrader says he held the land only as trustee, and was working on a salary. In our opinion, the evidence fails to sustain the declaration, and the court below should have found for the defendant.

[8] As the case was submitted to the court upon an agreement that the evidence in another case should be taken and treated as the evidence in it, the rule applicable to demurrers to evidence governs its disposition, and calls for the entry here of the judgment the trial court should have rendered.

Accordingly the judgment complained of will be reversed, and the action dismissed, with costs to the plaintiff in error both here and in the court below.

ROBINSON, J. (dissenting as to point 2 of the syllabus). It seems anomalous that there may be right to demur after final judgment in any case, particularly when, as in this case, the party granted that right is grossly in default. So to hold is wholly out of accord with ordinary principle, to say nothing of the plain terms and the well recognized spirit and purpose of secs. 46 and 47, ch. 125, Code 1906.

The statute provides that an office judgment which is not set aside in the manner therein provided shall become a final judgment at the end of the first term after which the office judgment is taken. Surely this does not mean that the judgment is merely final as to matters of fact and still not of final character as to matters of law. It plainly means that the suit is ended, except as to the mere ministerial act of entering the judgment in the order book. It means final judgment as the words are ordinarily understood—the end of the case. “A final judgment is such a judgment as at once puts an end to the action by declaring that the plaintiff has or has not entitled himself to recover the remedy for which he sues.” Black on Judgments, sec. 21. The statute was meant to give a defendant ample time for defense and then to foreclose him from any defense, if he did not present it in that time. Always, everywhere, it has been conceded that this statute was made to hasten the end of litigation. Yet the decision herein permits one to come after final judgment, as under general law he can do in no other case, and take further steps even without showing good cause for his delay. Quite out of harmony is this with the very provisions of the statute itself, which provides that even at the term at which the defendant may set aside the office judgment, if he is so far in default that the judgment has been entered or a writ of inquiry executed, he must show good cause before he can have the judgment set aside. Post v. Carr, 42 W. Va. 72, 24 S. E. 583; Wilson v. Kennedy, 63 W. Va. 1, 59 S. E. 736.

That the judgment has not been entered in the order book does not give a defendant right to appear at a subsequent term and re-open the litigation by entering a demurrer to the declaration. The statute expressly makes the judgment final at the end of the first term, though not entered in the order book. The case, by the force of the statute, is then judicially closed. The court has no further judicial power in regard to it. It has no jurisdiction to entertain a demurrer. Is not this what was held in Marsteller v. Ward, 52 W. Va. 74, 43 S. E. 178? That case plainly holds that nothing but ministerial duty remains in the court. If no judicial power remains in the court after the end of the term at which an office judgment becomes a final judgment, how can the court entertain and pass on a demurrer to the declaration? Speaking of the provisions of the statute, Judge Brannon, in the case last above cited, says: “These provisions mean something. They mean that the defendant has had ample time to appear, two rules and one term, and by his default he has confessed the demand, and it only remains for the court to record judgment, if certain other things which are required of the plaintiff by other provisions of section 46 are done by him, that is, if a certain affidavit is filed or proof of the demand furnished. But those things are required of the plaintiff; the statute does not enable the defendant, after that day, to make any defense.” Further on in the opinion he says that after the first term all defense is denied, that the court has no further jurisdiction, and that any further step in the cause is coram non jure. In Bank v. Burdette, 61 W. Va. 636, 57 S. E. 53, relied on in the majority opinion herein, Judge Brannon wrote nothing to the contrary. Nowhere therein does he even intimate that a demurrer may be entered at a term subsequent to the one at which the office judgment becomes a final judgment. He was dealing with a case in which a demurrer was entered before the office judgment became a final judgment. He does say that “if the demurrer is held good, and the case dismissed, the office judgment amounts to nought,” but plainly he is not there speaking of the final judgment which the law gives at the close of the term. He is speaking of the office judgment, the judgment entered at rules. He does not mean the final judgment, for that is not an office judgment, but a judgment of the term—by lapse of the term. So he is speaking of proceedings within the term, not of something done at a subsequent term. He tersely says: “In short, whether there is, or is not, a demurrer, no other defense can be made after the first term.” The point he was called upon to decide was whether the entry of the demurrer before the office judgment became a final judgment had the effect of setting aside the office judgment. He held that it did not—that it was not the character of plea that would set aside the office judgment. And though it was there held that a demurrer entered at the first term would not even operate to prevent the office judgment from becoming a final judgment, yet my associates now give a demurrer entered at a later term the effect absolutely to annul a judgment that has become final under the statute.

Certainly if a demurrer is in time it may avail as a defense. But the defendant must put it in seasonably, or it may not avail him. If entered and rightly sustained before the office judgment becomes a final judgment it will annul the office judgment. Yet simply its entry after office judgment will not prevent finality if it is not sustained before the end of the first term. The defendant, if tardy in demurring, must recognize this and not rely alone on his demurrer if there is danger of the first term going by without the court's judgment on his demurrer. He must plead his matter of fact also, file his counter affidavit, and thereby set aside the office judgment so that when his demurrer is acted on the law will not have pronounced final judgment against him. For, the finality of the judgment pronounced by the statute at the close of the first term, cuts off a pending defense by demurrer entered after office judgment. There is no hardship in this. Only the default of the defendant makes the demurrer to be pending at so late a time. A demurrer filed in term, after office judgment at rules, is one filed after default. The entry of the office judgment at rules is a pronouncement of default. To one in default the law does not accord extraordinary grace. It will let him in to be heard, provided his tardiness does not delay. Reynolds v. Bank, 6 Grat. (Va.) 183. Were not this rule recognized and enforced, litigation would be extended and become vexatious. Dilatoriness would be honored. Even an answer filed at the first term after default at rules will not delay, unless good cause for the tardiness is shown. McLaughlin v. Sayers, 78 S. E. 355. A defendant who has been so neglectful in answering the summons of the court as to allow a confession by office judgment at rules to be entered against him, is not to be rewarded by allowing a demurrer thereafter entered by him to retard the advance of the proceedings under the strict provisions of the statute of which he has all the time had notice. When he is summoned to rules, if he finds a demurrer a proper defense, he should there enter it. His appearance and the entry of a demurrer at rules prevents default—prevents an office judgment—and thus saves him wholly from the risk of a final judgment at the end of the first term. Bank v. Blair, 77 S. E. 274. If he comes later, it is his own fault. He may readily prevent an office judgment by entering his demurrer at rules. If he does not do so, but allows office judgment against him and waits until the term to demur, he must take such chances on his late demurrer being heard as the short time before the day of final judgment avails him.

On what principle can a distinction be made between defense of law and defense of fact so that the latter may be foreclosed by final judgment and the former admitted after final judgment. A final judgment forecloses everything in the case. All matters of law or fact, raised or that might have been raised, are settled and merged into it. It is too late for demurrer or plea. After final judgment nothing is open to the unsuccessful party but proceedings under the statute for correction of errors, writ of error, or appeal. He can not reopen the judgment simply by a demurrer as to which he was in default long before the judgment became final. The substantiality of a final judgment can never be tested by a demurrer to the declaration. If the declaration is so defective as not to sustain the judgment, the defendant must show that on error or appeal. The proposition that after final judgment right to demur, to plead, or to take further steps, is cut off, is so uniformly recognized, so consistent with reason and principle, that no citation of authority is necessary to support it.

If a demurrer may be put in after final judgment why may not a plea in abatement be then filed as well? We have held that a plea in abatement is not such issuable plea as will set aside an office judgment, since it does not go to the fact of the debt sought to be recovered. If everything is not ended by the final judgment, if it only forecloses the question of fact and its standing is conditioned on matters outside of fact, why may not a plea in abatement be available even after the finality of the judgment—at a subsequent term?

Further, suppose a demurrer, entered after final judgment, is sustained and the plaintiff permitted to amend his declaration. Shall not the defendant then be permitted to plead to the amended declaration? Why not? He has had no prior opportunity to do so. No such pleading has been in the case before. New matters are alleged by way of amendment. The defendant is not in default as to them. He could not answer them earlier. Shall he not be given an opportunity to plead to that for the first time presented? Shall the judgment be supported by an amendment of the declaration and the defendant denied a hearing as to the truth of the amendment? If so, though he is successful in his demurrer it avails him nought. Then why allow it at all? But if he is granted the right to plead and an issue is made on the amended declaration, there must be trial. What then has become of the final judgment that the statute gave? What has become of the speedy operation of the statute?

The court, as one of original jurisdiction, is wholly without power over a judgment that has become final under the force of the statute. So held Judge Moncure, as to a similar statute, in Enders' Ex'rs v. Burch, 15 Grat. (Va.) 64. After the final judgment it can take cognizance of no further steps in the case tending to defeat the judgment, except proceedings for the correction of error under Code 1906, ch. 134. "All proceedings in an action at law after an office judgment in favor of the plaintiff has become final are a nullity, or should be set aside so as to give the plaintiff the benefit of the final judgment in his favor." Gring v. Lake Drummond Canal and Water Co., 110 Va. 754, 67 S. E. 360.

It is elementary that defenses of law or fact must come before final judgment.

1. RAILROADS (§ 485*)—FIRES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railway company for destruction of property by fire alleged to have been started by sparks emitted from a locomotive, it is error to instruct the jury that the presumption of negligence, which arises from proof that the fire started from sparks so emitted, may be repelled by proof that the locomotive was equipped with an approved spark arrester, without more.

2. RAILROADS (§ 480*)—FIRES—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE—PROOF TO REBUT.

In such case, the presumption of negligence, which arises from proof that sparks from the locomotive started the fire, can only be repelled by proof that the locomotive was constructed, equipped, and operated in a reasonably safe way in relation to danger of fire therefrom.

3. RAILROADS (§ 454*)—NEGLIGENT EQUIPMENT—SPARK ARRESTER.

It is not required that the locomotive be equipped with the best and most approved spark arrester, but only with an approved and reasonably safe one.

Error to Circuit Court, Mercer County.

Action by O. W. Mills against the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

Hale & Pendleton, of Princeton, for plaintiff in error. A. W. Reynolds, of Princeton, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, J. Mills sued the Norfolk & Western Railway Company, demanding damages for loss of property by fire alleged to have been negligently set out on his premises by sparks from a passing locomotive. At the trial of the action, the jury found for defendant, and plaintiff comes assigning errors to his prejudice.

That erroneous instructions were given on behalf of defendant is plain from the record. That by their binding character they were prejudicial to plaintiff is likewise clear.

[1,2] Plaintiff's evidence tended to establish a prima facie case of negligence. From his evidence the jury were warranted in believing that the fire which destroyed plaintiff's property was set out by the sparks from a passing locomotive of defendant. If the jury so believed, then a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant arose, which the defendant was obliged to repel in order to acquit itself, by proving that the locomotive was properly constructed to avoid setting out fire on premises adjoining the railway by being equipped with an approved and reasonably safe spark arrester, and that as so constructed and equipped it was operated in a reasonably safe way in relation to danger of fire therefrom. Jacobs v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., 68 W. Va. 618, 70 S. E. 369; Wilson Bros. v. Bush, Receiver, 70 W. Va. 26, 73 S. E. 59; 33 Cyc. 1364-1367.

Now, defendant introduced evidence tending to prove that the locomotive was equipped with an approved and reasonably safe spark arrester, but it offered no evidence tending to prove operation of the locomotive so equipped in a reasonably safe way. The best appliance may be so negligently used as to fail to furnish the protection for which it is intended. The mere statement of the engineer that he had been running for seven years is not enough. On this occasion he may have been negligent. For instance, he may have had greater draught on the engine than necessary. Defendant, therefore, did not fully repel the presumption of negligence arising from the evidence offered by plaintiff. Yet the court virtually instructed the jury that the use of an approved spark arrester alone would repel that presumption. It gave two binding instructions to the effect that the jury should find for defendant if they believed that such a spark arrester had been used, without more. The court thereby told the jury to find for defendant notwithstanding plaintiff's prima facie case was not rebutted by defendant. The court thus took from plaintiff the benefit of his prima facie case. By binding instructions it directed the same to be rebutted by that which was insufficient in law to do so. Only by showing proper construction, equipment, and operation of the locomotive is the presumption repelled. Wilson Bros. v. Bush, Receiver, supra. Nothing else will disprove the presumption of defendant's negligence. "In addition to exercising care and precaution in selecting and keeping in repair the machinery and appliances the company must not be guilty of negligence in operating that machinery, for if it so negligently operates machinery that fires result, it will be liable." 3 Elliott on Railroads, sec. 1225. It was this principle that the court had in mind when it used the term "competent servants" in Jacobs v. Railroad Co., supra.

Defendant argues that negligence in operation of the locomotive is not within the averments of plaintiff's declaration. We find it otherwise. Under the averment of negligence in that pleading plaintiff's prima facie case was clearly admissible. When it was made out the burden was on defendant.

[3] Plaintiff says the court erred in refusing three instructions for which he asked. We find the first two erroneous and properly refused, because they use the words "best and most approved" in relation to the kind of spark arresters that a railroad company must use to avoid liability. Wilson v. Bush, Receiver, supra. This same error was in the instructions given for defendant which we have held bad, but of course plaintiff can not complain of that. The other instruction asked by plaintiff was properly refused. It puts a higher duty on the railway company than the law of the case recognizes. We do not think it essential to discuss the point.

The judgment will be reversed, the verdict set aside and a new trial awarded.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wetzel County. Suit in partition by Albert Wright and others against Timothy Pittman and others. From the decree the Hope Natural Gas Company appeals. Modified and affirmed.

A. B. Fleming, Charles Powell, and Kemble White, all of Fairmont, for appellants. Thomas P. Jacobs and Thayer M. McIntire, both of New Martinsville, for appellees.

WILLIAMS, J. Claiming that their ancestor Charles P. Garrett, deceased, acquired, in his lifetime, by deed from Timothy Pittman, Jacob Pittman, and Isaac Pittman 3 undivided tenths of 214 acres of land of which their father, Elias Pittman, died seised, which deed, it is alleged, was duly made and delivered, but was never recorded and is now lost, the heirs of said Charles P. Garrett have brought this suit for a partition of 36½ acres of land, it being that part of the 214 acres which was assigned to Rebecca Pittman, widow of Elias Pittman, deceased, as her dower, to have the lost deed restored, as a muniment of their title, and for an accounting of plaintiffs' alleged share of the gas rental and royalty oil.

There are a producing oil well and a producing gas well on the land; the former being owned by Hervey and McNaught, and the latter by the Hope Natural Gas Company. Their respective rights therein are admitted in the bill. The Hope Natural Gas Company, claiming to be the owner of the gas well under separate leases from the adverse claimants of the aforesaid three undivided tenths of land, has refused to account to plaintiffs for the annual rentals therefor, and the Eureka Pipe Line Company has likewise refused to turn over to them the three-tenths of the royalty oil in its pipe lines, until the title to said three-tenths of the land is settled between the Garrett heirs and the three aforementioned Pittmans. Therefore the above-named companies were made parties, and the bill prays for an accounting against them. On the 2d June, 1910, the chancellor heard the cause upon bill taken for confessed as to all the adult defendants, and determined the question of title to the said three-tenths of the land in favor of plaintiffs, and restored the lost deed by giving his decree the effect of a deed, and directing its recordation in the county court clerk's office. By decrees made at subsequent terms of court partition was made of the land, except the oil and gas, by a sale thereof and the ascertainment of each co-owner's share in the proceeds; it having been found that partition in kind could not be made without detriment to the interest of all parties concerned. Division was also accordingly made of the accumulated royalty oil and gas rentals, and provision made for the payment of future rentals and the delivery of royalty oils to the parties according to their several interests, which the decree determined.

The Hope Natural Gas Company was granted this appeal to all those decrees, about seven in number. It does not deny its liability to account to plaintiffs, if they are the true owners of the three-tenths of the land. But it insists that the chancellor did not acquire jurisdiction to pronounce the decrees complained of, for want of sufficient allegations in the bill, and for lack of jurisdiction over the persons of Timothy Pittman and Milly C., his wife, who were personally served with process in the state of Ohio, where they then resided. Jurisdiction is necessary to give validity to judicial proceedings; and, if there was lack of jurisdiction to pronounce the decrees complained of, they are void, and appellant, having such interest as entitles it to have the disputed title to the land settled, before it could properly be compelled to pay rental to either of the adverse claimants, has a right to appeal therefrom for its own protection. Its right of appeal is analogous to what it would have been if it had filed a bill of interpleader, calling upon the adverse claimants of the land to litigate their respective claims.

The Eureka Pipe Line Company and the Hope Natural Gas Company are the only parties that appeared to the bill. They appeared on the 4th of May, 1910, at a regular term, and demurred to the bill, assigning nothing in support thereof. Plaintiffs joined in the demurrer, and the issue of law thereon was heard on the 1st of June, 1910, and the demurrer overruled. Demurrants were given until the next day to answer; and, failing to answer, the cause was heard on the 2d of June, 1910, upon bill taken for confessed as to all of the adult defendants, and upon the answers of the guardian ad litem of the infant defendants, and a decree entered, finding that the three aforesaid Pittmans had conveyed their undivided three-tenths interest in all of the land of which their father had died seised, by deed made and delivered to Charles P. Garrett, plaintiffs' ancestor, in 1877, and further finding that said deed was lost and was never recorded. The decree also restored said lost deed in the manner above stated, and canceled two deeds, one executed by Isaac W. Pittman and wife to J. A. Pittman, and another by said J. A. Pittman and wife to Sarah A. Pittman the wife of Isaac W. Pittman, for the undivided one-tenth interest in said 38½ acres of land.

[1-3, 7] Appellant insists that it was error to take the bill for confessed as to Timothy Pittman and his wife, who were residents of the state of Ohio, and had been personally served with process in that state. True it was error, but the decree adjudicating title to the land and restoring the lost deed is appealable, and no appeal was taken therefrom for more than a year. The appeal as to it will have to be dismissed as having been improvidently awarded. The time of appeal is now limited to one year instead of two, as formerly. Acts 1909, c. 40. Moreover, the error does not relate to jurisdiction. The location of the land and the subject-matter of the suit gave the court jurisdiction to pronounce the decree. The nonresidency of Timothy Pittman and wife could not defeat jurisdiction. So far as it relates to restoring the lost deed, the suit was in its nature in rem, and the location of the land gave the circuit court of Wetzel county jurisdiction to pass on questions affecting the title. Tennant's Heirs v. Fretts, 67 W. Va. 569, 68 S. E. 387, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 625, 140 Am. St. Rep. 979. Error in taking a bill for confessed as to a nonresident personally served out of the state, instead of hearing the cause, as to such nonresident, upon order of publication completed, is not jurisdictional error. The suit was primarily for partition, and the court had the right to settle the question of title to the land, and rights to the royalty oil and gas well rentals, as incident thereto. Section 1, c. 79, Code 1906; Davis v. Settle, 43 W. Va. 17, 26 S. E. 557; Irvin v. Stover, 67 W. Va. 356, 67 S. E. 1119. Moreover, the decree is a default decree, and no application was made to the court below to have it corrected. This is an additional reason why the appeal, as to the decree of June 2, 1910, will have to be dismissed. Section 5, c. 134, Code. All the matters, respecting which relief was given, were well pleaded, and there was no lack of jurisdiction in the court to pronounce any of the decrees complained of.

[6] At a special term of the court held on the 5th of July, 1910, the Hope Natural Gas Company and the Eureka Pipe Line Company were permitted to file their answers and demurrers to the bill. Those answers came too late to raise an issue concerning any of the matters determined by the decree of June 2d. The term of court at which that decree had been entered had adjourned, and the appealable matter thereby determined was no longer controvertible. Such matter was no longer in the breast of the court.

[3] It is insisted that it was error to appoint a special receiver to take charge of the royalty oil and gas rentals, without notice to the parties, as required by section 28, c. 133, of the Code. Granting that it was error, this court will not now reverse for such error alone. It only relates to procedure; and, seeing that the case is one in which it was proper to appoint a receiver, and that he has performed his duties in the manner required by the decree appointing him, such decree will not be reversed for failure to give notice of application for a receiver. The Hope Natural Gas Company was required to turn over to the special receiver the gas rentals in its hands, less the one-fifth thereof which the decree found to belong to it, and the Eureka Pipe Line Company to turn over to him all the royalty oil in its possession belonging to the owners of the royalty interests, the amount of which was ascertained to be 326 barrels. This the special receiver was directed by the decree to sell. The Hope Natural Gas Company appears to be the owner of a one-fifth of the royalty oil, as well as one-fifth of the gas rentals, and it is insisted that the decree of distribution, made on the 26th day of May, 1911, is erroneous, in that it fails to direct the special receiver to pay over to it its share of the proceeds of royalty oil. The proceeds thereof amounted to $423.78 at that time, and was properly taxed with its proportion of the costs of suit. It, therefore, appears that appellant's pecuniary interest, being the one-fifth, is less than $100. Moreover, it appears to be an error of record, which could have been corrected by the court below, because plaintiffs' bill admits that appellant is a one-fifth joint owner in the royalty oil, as well as a like owner in the gas rentals. The decree also recognizes its interest in the royalty oil, but does not expressly direct the receiver to pay it over to it. This is not an error calling for reversal, but is one which can be corrected here.

[5] It is insisted that it was error to hear the cause without replication to appellant's answer, no proof having been taken. No replication was necessary. The only averments in the bill, concerning which it could be said the answer raised an issue, were in relation to those matters that had been determined by the appealable decree, rendered June 2, 1910, upon bill taken for confessed. The answer came too late to make an issue as to them; and it did not controvert, but expressly admitted, all other material allegations in the bill. The failure to reply is an admission of the truth of the answer. But the answer in this case did not deny, but admitted, the truth of the only allegations of the bill which defendant could, at that time, have denied; and a replication was therefore wholly unnecessary.

[4] It is said that W. E. Lemasters, who is interested in the oil and gas royalties, was not made a party to the suit. But we find that he is a party plaintiff, by the name of E. M. Lemasters. His correct name, W. E. Lemasters, appears in the bill, and in the decree distributing gas rentals and proceeds of royalty oil, in which he is given a life interest in the one-sixth.

Cross-assigning error in brief, Timothy Pittman and Milly C. Pittman, his wife, insist that it was error to take the bill for confessed as to them; they being nonresidents and personally served with summons in a foreign state. This was error, but not an error affecting jurisdiction. The court had jurisdiction to enter the decree which it did enter, upon order of publication executed; and personal service out of the state is made the equivalent thereof. Moreover, application should have been first made to the court below to have the error corrected. Section 5, c. 134, Code.

The decree of May 26, 1911, making distribution of the proceeds of oil and gas rentals, will be corrected, directing the special receiver to pay to the Hope Natural Gas Company its one-fifth of the proceeds of sale of royalty oil, after deducting from said one-fifth its proportion of the costs provided for in the decree; and, as so corrected and modified, it and all other decrees appealed from will be affirmed, with costs to appellee.

HARTMYER et al. v. EVERLY et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 28, 1913.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where under the case as presented, as a matter of law the judgment could only be that which has been entered, the appellate court will not reverse for errors in instructions to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4225-4228, 4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

2. EJECTMENT (§ 12*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF—CONSTRUCTION OF DEED—OTHER INSTRUMENTS.

In ejectment, the plaintiff can not extend the description in his deed by reference to a patent or other paper not referred to or adopted for description in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 47-55; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 390*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONSTRUCTION OF DEEDS—EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE.

Description of land in a deed, free and clear from ambiguity, cannot be varied, controlled or contradicted by parol or extrinsic evidence. It is conclusive as to what land is intended to be conveyed by the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1719-1721, 1723-1728; Dec. Dig. § 390.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Preston County.

Ejectment by Christian Hartmyer and others against John L. Eberly and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

P. J. Crogan and Hughes & Conley, all of Kingwood, for plaintiffs in error. Lazelle & Stewart, of Morgantown, for defendants in error.

ROBINSON, J. [1] The action is ejectment. The jury found for defendants, and judgment followed accordingly. If the theory of the case advanced by plaintiffs was sound, several instructions given to the jury over the objection of plaintiffs would be so erroneous and prejudicial as to warrant the reversal which they seek. But we find that theory not supported by the record. Plaintiffs proved no title to the land in controversy. In no event could they recover. Though instructions to the jury were erroneous, yet, since no other judgment than the one entered could have been rightly given, plaintiffs are not prejudiced. Reilly v. Nicoll, 72 W. Va. 189, 77 S. E. 897. If a verdict had been returned for plaintiffs, it could not have stood. As a matter of law, they could not recover without showing title in themselves.

Plaintiffs argue the error in instructions on the assumption that their evidence tended to prove a case. The case should never have been submitted to the jury. In any event, defendants were entitled to the judgment which was entered in their favor. In this opinion, we need only to discuss the total insufficiency of plaintiffs' evidence to make any case at all.

That a plaintiff in ejectment must ordinarily recover on the strength of his own title is elementary. That in this case the burden was on plaintiffs to show paper title to the land sought to be recovered, counsel will no doubt concede. It is quite true that title by adverse possession will suffice for recovery in ejectment. But here plaintiffs rested not on actual possession by enclosure or direct occupancy of the land in controversy. No evidence offered tended to prove such actual possession by them. They sought to hold the land as within the bounds of their title papers.

The land in controversy is a small parcel of about ten acres, lying between tracts of land which unquestionably belong to plaintiffs and defendants respectively. Plaintiffs say that it is within the proper bounds of their land; defendants say it is not within the bounds of plaintiffs' land, but that however this may be they have title by long adverse possession. As to whether the last mentioned claim of defendants is well founded we have no concern, under the case as it presents itself for decision. Since plaintiffs have proved no title to the parcel, it matters not to whom the same actually belongs.

The boundary of land which plaintiffs say embraces the parcel in controversy came to them and a brother of theirs by descent from their father. The brother, before the institution of this suit, conveyed his interest to one of the plaintiffs. To the ancestor, William Hartmyer, the boundary was conveyed by William Hagans, the deed containing a description by specific metes and bounds, calling for one hundred and eighty-nine and one-quarter acres, more or less, and reciting that the land conveyed is the same that was conveyed to William Hagans by Brown and Hagans, commissioners, by deed of record. To William Hagans it had been conveyed by Brown and Hagans, special commissioners in a chancery suit, the deed containing a description by exactly the same definite metes and bounds and calling for the same number of acres as the metes and bounds and number of acres given in the other deed to which we have referred. This deed of the special commissioners shows that they conveyed the land pursuant to a decree to fulfil certain contracts for the sale of land made by Harrison and Elisha M. Hagans, then deceased, and that the conveyance was upon a contract for the sale of the land therein mentioned made by Harrison and Elisha M. Hagans to one Thomas J. Collins, who had assigned his right thereunder to the grantee, William Hagans. The deed recites that the tract thereby conveyed is one that had been contracted to Collins. And, as we have said, it specifically describes the tract by metes and bounds, and gives its acreage as one hundred and eighty-nine and one-quarter.

Now, plaintiffs introduced these two deeds in the chain of their father's title, but conceded that the calls as given in them, which we may iterate were the same in each deed, would not take in the small parcel in dispute. But they claimed that these deeds contained mistakes in the specific descriptions which they uttered, and they sought to amend the same by reference to a written contract for the sale of the land made by Harrison and Elisha M. Hagans to Collins. The court permitted the introduction of that contract. The description of the land given in it is brief and general. It is for two tracts of land in a locality named, "the one tract known as the Faw Tract, and the other lying adjoining it on the south; supposed to contain in the aggregate, two hundred and twenty acres." Then plaintiffs introduced a patent from the Commonwealth of Virginia to William Faw, dated Aug. 11, 1788, containing a description by metes and bounds of a tract of land in the same locality. Plaintiffs claimed that the deeds were meant to contain the same description as that given in the patent, and that the deeds so read would embrace the parcel in dispute. The trial court evidently adopted such a theory, and permitted plaintiffs to rely upon the deeds as amended in description by the patent. These paper-make the only showing of title that plaintiffs presented, other than the admission by all parties at the beginning of the trial that their respective titles would run back to a common source.

[2] The deeds spoke for themselves. They could not be changed by the patent. Those deeds contained independent particular description of the land and in no way adopted or referred to the patent in aid of the particular description which they contained. True, the deed of the special commissioners recited that it was made to carry out a contract for the sale of land made by Harrison and Elisha M. Hagans to Collins, but it by no means referred to the contract for a description of the land conveyed. It did not even say that the contract was a written one. It gave its own description of the land the contract should cover, and that description was definite and particular by metes and bounds. If the contract had been referred to for further description, the particular description in the deed would prevail over it; for, as we have seen, it contained only the most general terms of description. It does say that one of the tracts sold by it is the Faw Tract, but it does not refer to any patent for a description of the tract. The tract could be called the Faw Tract as it was and still not be all the land originally patented there to William Faw. How often do tracts of land called by a general name like this lose a part by conveyance and still retain the name?

[3] A court itself in a chancery suit carrying out this contract for the sale of land evidently ascertained the specific boundary the contract embraced and caused the same to be conveyed by special commissioners in fulfillment thereof to William Hagans as the assignee of Collins. William Hagans as such assignee by his acceptance of the deed gave practical construction to the meaning of the contract as to the particular boundary intended by its general description. How can we say that he meant the description to be different or that a mistake was made by the court or its duly appointed special commissioners in ascertaining what should be conveyed by the contract? William Hagans seems to have been satisfied that the description in the deed to him embraced all that he was entitled to as holder of the contract, though the deed called for a much smaller number of acres. He was bound to know just what the description in the deed to him embraced. So was the ancestor of plaintiffs when he took a conveyance from William Hagans by the same metes and bounds. There is nothing referred to in either deed which will control or change the same particular description given in each. The calls in the patent, or the patent itself, was not resorted to in the contract for description of the land. The contract was not resorted to in either of the deeds for description. In none of the papers was the patent referred to in any way. The parties plainly were not conveying by the patent, but by clear description independent therefrom, written into and adopted by their deeds. Then from these papers what speaks any intention of the parties to convey what the Faw patent had conveyed? There is clearly no ambiguity in the deeds. Looking to them, we find them certain as to meaning in the description of the land. Not a single term indicates that they were meant to convey the land by the description in the patent. They cannot be changed by the assumption that they are wrong, nor by extrinsic evidence when they are unambiguous. No part of the description in them is inconsistent with any other part. Where a part of the description in a deed is inconsistent with the remaining part, and thus shown to be erroneous, it may be rejected; or, when the description given is uncertain and ambiguous, parol or extrinsic evidence will be admitted to show to what it truly applies. But where terms are used in a description which are clear and intelligible, the court will put a construction upon those terms, and parol or extrinsic evidence will not be admissible to control the legal effect of such description. Devlin on Real Property and Deeds, sec. 1042; Bond v. Fay, 12 Allen (Mass.) 86. Plaintiffs could not change the terms of their deeds by extrinsic evidence, as they were permitted to undertake to do. They could not, in ejectment, reform the deed by which they held their land, so as to take in the parcel sought to be recovered. This case is controlled by a well known general rule which has been concisely stated as follows: "Where the description in a deed of the premises intended to be conveyed is clear and free from ambiguity, it cannot be varied, controlled, or contradicted by parol or extrinsic evidence. In such case the deed must be held to be conclusive evidence as to what land is intended by the grantor to be conveyed, the quantity of land, and likewise the conclusive evidence of his intention to include in or exclude from the instrument particular land." 17 Cyc. 616.

Plaintiffs' evidence did not appreciably tend to make a case. The jury having reached the verdict that the court should have directed, the judgment entered thereon will be affirmed.

MARION COUNTY LUMBER CO. v.
HODGES.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 10, 1913.)

1. DEEDS (§ 138*)—"EXCEPTION" AND "RESERVATION"—CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

While there is a well-defined and established difference between an exception and a reservation in a deed, the use of the word "exception" or "reservation" will not control the manifest intention, as they are often used interchangeably and synonymously.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 456; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2538-2544; vol. 8, p. 7656; vol. 7, pp. 6140-6144; vol. 8, p. 7787.]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALES OF STANDING TIMBER—EXCEPTION OR RESERVATION.

Under a deed conveying the standing timber on a plantation of 1,112 acres except such as might be necessary for plantation use, rails, wood, and board, enough timber should be left to supply both the present and future needs of the plantation, and the grantor's right to timber was not limited to a right to cut timber for plantation uses until the timber was removed by the grantee, especially where it appeared that the method of cutting and removing timber adopted by lumber companies almost invariably, if not necessarily, left scattered saw timber sufficient to supply the ordinary demands of a plantation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALES OF STANDING TIMBER—EXCEPTION OR RESERVATION.

Under a deed granting the standing timber on a plantation except such as might be necessary for plantation use, no particular body of timber was excepted or reserved, and the grantor could not set aside a tract of timber and exclude the grantee therefrom unless such tract with all other uncut timber was necessary to satisfy the exception.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALES OF STANDING TIMBER—EXCEPTION OR RESERVATION.

Under a deed conveying the standing timber on a plantation of 1,112 acres, 350 of which were then in cultivation, except such as might be necessary for plantation use, only so much timber was reserved as was necessary for the needs of the plantation as it then existed, although the grantor thereafter increased its needs by bringing additional land into cultivation.

5. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALE OF TIMBER—RESERVATION—PLANTATION USES—EVIDENCE.

In an action between the grantor and grantee of standing timber on a plantation of 1,112 acres, 350 of which were in cultivation, except such as might be necessary for plantation use, evidence on an application for a temporary injunction held to show that a tract of 94 acres of timber from which the grantor had excluded the grantee was not necessary for plantation uses.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1180*)—REVERSAL WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

A deed conveying standing timber excepted such as might be necessary for plantation use. The grantee construed this to mean that it might remove all of the timber and that the grantor could only use timber for plantation use until it had so removed it, and refused to agree to leave any timber. The grantor set apart a tract of timber and forcibly excluded the grantee therefrom. The grantee obtained a temporary injunction against interference with the removal of the timber which was dissolved, and both parties were enjoined from cutting timber pending the suit. The evidence showed that the tract set apart was not necessary for plantation uses. Held that, each party having misconceived his own as well as his opponent's rights, the reversal of the order granting such injunction would be without prejudice to the respective rights of the parties as adjudicated by the Supreme Court.

7. INJUNCTION (§ 132*)—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—SCOPE.

In an action between the grantor and grantee of standing timber, except such as might be necessary for plantation use, in which both parties were enjoined from cutting timber pending the suit, the injunction improperly restrained the grantee from removing timber already cut, even though the grantor was entitled to an injunction against further cutting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 302; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

8. INJUNCTION (§ 148*)—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—CONDITIONS ON GRANTING—BOND.

It was error to grant a temporary injunction without requiring an injunction bond as a condition thereof, since the statute requires such bond and the courts have no power to dispense with it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 323-334; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marlboro County; T. H. Spain, Judge.

Action by the Marion County Lumber Company against C. P. Hodges. From an order dissolving a temporary injunction granted on plaintiff's application and granting a temporary injunction restraining both parties, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

M. C. Woods and A. F. Woods, both of Marion, for appellant. W. J. Montgomery, of Marion, and D. D. McColl, of Bennettsville, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. In 1904, William Evans conveyed to Cape Fear Lumber Company "all the timber, except such as may be necessary for plantation use, rails, wood and board," on a plantation containing 1,112 acres, 350 of which were then in cultivation, together with the rights of way necessary for its removal. The grantee is to have ten years from date of the deed to cut and remove the timber; and, if it has not done so at the end of that time, it is to have ten years longer, by the payment of 6 per cent. on the purchase price. Plaintiff is the successor of Cape Fear Lumber Company in title to the timber, and defendant has acquired the title of William Evans to the land. In 1912 plaintiff began to cut and remove the timber. Defendant tried to get plaintiff to come to some agreement as to what amount of timber should be left under the exception in the deed, which is quoted above; but plaintiff declined to make any agreement, contending that it has the right to cut and remove all the timber on the land, and that defendant's right is limited to the use of timber for the purposes mentioned in the deed only so long as it lasts, in other words, until plaintiff has cut and removed it. Thereupon, under the advice of counsel, defendant had five disinterested landowners of the community to view the premises and set off to him the quantity of timber which, in their judgment, would satisfy the exception. Assuming that the exception embraced enough timber to satisfy the needs of the plantation not only in its condition at the date of the deed, but also as they supposed that it would be after more of it had been brought into cultivation as the result of having had the timber removed from it, and assuming also that those needs must be supplied, until a new growth of timber would attain sufficient size to supply them, which they estimated would require from 25 to 30 years, these gentlemen set off to defendant the timber on 94 acres of the tract. Defendant had the boundaries of the body of timber so set off to him marked, and notified plaintiff not to cut any of it. Defendant and his witnesses say that plaintiff's agent agreed to let defendant know, before going upon said tract to cut—presumably that he might have opportunity to take such steps as he might be advised to protect his interests—and that, for some time, while they were cutting the timber on other parts of the plantation, they observed the boundaries of the part set off to defendant. But on the night of July 28, 1912, in defiance of defendant's notice and contrary to their said agreement, they laid their logging railroad on said tract, and began cutting the timber early the next morning with such a great force of hands that, by 11 o'clock in the forenoon, they had cut and carried away 14 car loads of logs, aggregating 50,000 feet of timber. On discovering that plaintiff was thus endeavoring, as he supposed, to defeat his rights, defendant took with him an armed force of men, and drove plaintiff's logging crew out of the woods, threatening to shoot any who dared to remain to cut or remove any more of the timber. He also tore up 240 yards of plaintiff's logging railroad which had been laid on said tract. Thereupon plaintiff brought this action for injunction, and, on an ex parte showing, his honor, Judge Spain, issued an order enjoining defendant from "interfering with plaintiff's laborers, logging equipment, and railroad, and otherwise interfering with plaintiff in the cutting and removal of the timber." Under protection of this order, plaintiff resumed its operations, and was cutting and removing the timber on said tract at the rate of about 100,000 feet a day, when defendant obtained a rule requiring plaintiff to show cause why the order enjoining him should not be dissolved, and, in the meantime, restraining further operations by plaintiff. On hearing the return, and the affidavits pro and con, his honor dissolved the injunction which he had issued against defendant, but enjoined both parties, pending the litigation, from "cutting, removing, or in any wise interfering with any of the timber" on said 94 acres. From this order plaintiff appealed.

[1] Counsel for both parties agree that the case depends upon the proper construction of the clause in the Evans deed which, for the sake of convenience, we have referred to as the exception, although, in legal effect, it is perhaps more nearly a reservation. It is not material, however, whether we call it an exception or a reservation. While there is a well-defined and established difference between the two, the courts, with practical unanimity, agree that the use of the technical word "exception" or "reservation" will not be allowed to control the manifest intention, for they are often used interchangeably and synonymously. 13 Cyc. 674; 11 A. & E. Enc. L. (2d Ed.) 555. It is our duty therefore to give the clause in question a fair and reasonable interpretation, and, having ascertained the intention of the parties to the deed, to give effect to it.

[2] Thus construing the exception, we cannot sustain plaintiff's contention that it has the right to cut and remove all the timber from the plantation, and that defendant has no right, except to use thereof so long as it lasts. The language is plain, and the intention is clearly expressed to except from the grant so much timber as may be necessary for plantation purposes. In view of the ever present and well-known necessity for timber and its products to supply the various needs of a large plantation, it is highly improbable that the grantor would have intentionally conveyed all the timber on his plantation so that he would then, if the grantee had exercised the right to cut immediately, or afterwards, the cutting having been deferred to a later date, be compelled to go into the market and buy timber for his plantation uses. The words "such as may be necessary" look to the future as well as the present, and we think the intention was that enough timber should be left to supply both the present and future needs of the plantation. The deed fixes no limit of time—how long such needs must be supplied—and we should therefore fix such as appears, from the language used and all the circumstances, to be the most reasonable and most probably that which was within the contemplation of the parties to the contract.

The plaintiff's own testimony strongly supports the construction which we have adopted; for it tends to show that the method of cutting and removing timber adopted by such companies is such that, for various reasons, almost invariably, if not necessarily, scattered saw timber enough is left to supply the ordinary demands of a plantation, and that no trees under ten inches in diameter are cut, and that this case has been no exception to the rule. It is not improbable, therefore, that the parties had in mind this method and custom of cutting, and contracted with reference to it.

[3] The same reasons point to the conclusion that it was not the intention to except or reserve any particular body of timber or that on any particular part of the plantation. If so, it would have been easy to set it apart by description in the deed, and that would most probably have been done. Therefore, after execution of the deed, neither party could say to the other, "This tree is mine, and that is yours," or, "This body of trees is mine and the rest is yours." It follows that defendant had no right to have the timber on the 94 acres set off to him, mark around it, and exclude plaintiff therefrom, unless he can make it appear that it will take all the timber thereon, including that which has been left on other parts of the plantation, to satisfy the exception, as herein interpreted. For while it is true, as we have said, that the intention was not to except the timber on any particular part of the plantation, yet the exception must be given practical effect, and if, in doing so, it is found that all the timber has been cut, except that on the 94 acres, and if it takes all that to satisfy the exception, the fact that it is all in one body is an immaterial incident. Enough must be left to satisfy the exception, whether it be scattered about over the plantation, or in one body.

[4] In the absence of language, or of facts and circumstances, indicating a contrary intention, the deed must be construed as referring to the needs of the plantation as it existed at the date thereof. The construction contended for by defendant might result in the grantee taking nothing by the grant; because it is conceivable that, within the time allowed to cut and remove the timber, the grantor could bring enough additional land into cultivation, or in other ways so increase the needs of the plantation for timber, that it would require all the timber thereon to satisfy them. Such a result could not have been intended. Therefore plaintiff must leave only enough timber to supply the needs of the plantation as it existed at the date of the deed, and as it was then used. Midland Timber Co. v. Pegues, 93 S. C. 82, 76 S. E. 32; 13 Cyc. 677, and note.

[5] Upon examining the record to ascertain the showing made by the parties respectively at the hearing, we find that five of defendant's neighbors, who are farmers, and are therefore supposed to know the needs of a plantation, testified that they are familiar with his plantation, and have thoroughly examined that part of it which has been cut over by plaintiff, and that enough timber has been left thereon for the use of the plantation for an unlimited time, without regard to the future growth of timber; and they further say that defendant's claim of the timber on the 94 acres is utterly unreasonable. Three of plaintiff's witnesses, who are experts in estimating timber, swear that an abundant supply has been left on the land already cut over for all plantation purposes for an unlimited time; some of them say that as much as 200,000 feet have been left, enough to build 25 good tenant houses, and they all say that there is on the 94 acres at least a million feet of merchantable timber, enough to build 250 tenant houses. It appears that no timber under ten inches in diameter has been cut, except a small quantity for cross-ties, and we know that trees of this size and even smaller are fit for many plantation uses. It also appears that there are now on the plantation ten good tenant houses with the usual necessary outbuildings. The defendant furnishes no evidence to the contrary, except he says, in his own affidavit, that practically all the timber has been cut off the land that has been cut over, and that nothing of any consequence or value has been left. The five neighbors who set off the 94 acres to him do not swear that so much is necessary. They only certify that it is.

[6] It appears therefore that, upon a proper construction of the deed and consideration of the showing made at the hearing, defendant was not entitled to an order of injunction. Kelly v. Tiner, 86 S. C. 164, 6 S. E. 465. But, as each party misconceived his own as well as his opponent's rights under the deed, the reversal of the order of injunction is without prejudice to have their respective rights, as herein adjudicated, observed and protected.

Appellant contends that the order was also erroneous, because it enjoined plaintiff from the enjoyment of its easements, and the right to use its railroad across the 94 acres to get out other timber about which there was no dispute. Plaintiff has misconstrued the order. It enjoins only the cutting, removing or interfering with the timber on the 94 acres. Nothing is said about the easement or the use of the railroad. Nor does it appear that defendant objected to the plaintiff's use of its easements and railroad for the purpose of getting out any timber, except that on the 94 acres. The record shows that the whole contest before the circuit judge centered upon the right to cut and remove that body of timber. Naturally, therefore, the order was directed solely to that matter.

[7] The order does, however, enjoin the removal of about 85,000 feet of timber that had been cut, and was lying on the ground when the restraining order obtained by defendant was served. Without regard to defendant's right to injunction on other grounds, under the circumstances of this case, it was error to enjoin the removal of the timber which had already been cut. Lumber Corporation v. Burton, 89 S. C. 143, 21 S. E. 820.

[8] His honor also erred in not requiring an injunction bond, as a condition of granting the injunction. The statute requires it, and the courts have no power to dispense with it. Smith v. Smith, 51 S. C. 379, 29 S. E. 227; Water Co. v. Nunamaker, 73 S. C. 50, 53 S. E. 996; Ex parte Zeigler, 83 S. C. 78, 64 S. E. 513, 916, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1005; Life Ins. Co. v. Mobley, 89 S. C. 189, 21 S. E. 817; Groce v. G. S. & A. R. Co., 94 S. C. 199, 78 S. E. 889.

The order appealed from is therefore reversed, and the case is remanded to the circuit court for such further proceedings as may be necessary, not inconsistent with the views herein announced.

Reversed.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of York County; T. S. Sease, Judge.

Action by Henry D. Smith against the Southern Railway Company and Southern Railway Company—Carolina Division. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

B. L. Abney, of Columbia, and McDonald & McDonald, of Winnsboro, for appellants. J. Harry Foster, of Yorkville, for respondent.

HYDRICK, J. [1] This is the second appeal in this case. The facts are fully stated in the opinion of the court on the first appeal (93 S. C. 115, 76 S. E. 109), which resulted in the reversal of a judgment of nonsuit. The evidence on the second trial was not materially different from that on the first, except in quantity. Therefore the court did not err in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant. It makes no difference that defendant had more evidence to sustain its contentions of fact than it had at the first trial, because, where there is any evidence to sustain a material fact in issue, in a law case, the weight or sufficiency of it is exclusively for the jury, except in so far as the trial judge may consider that feature of it on a motion for new trial.

[2, 3] In Jackson v. Railway, 84 S. C. 299, 66 S. E. 181, it was held that, as the rules which govern the granting of nonsuits govern also the direction of verdicts, this court could not consistently sustain the direction of a verdict for defendant on the third trial, when it had sustained the refusal of a nonsuit on each of the previous trials on substantially the same evidence. Applying that principle here, the reversal of the judgment of nonsuit on the first appeal concludes this appeal in so far as it questions the ruling of the court in refusing defendant's motion for the direction of the verdict, because the evidence was practically the same in each case.

What we have said is especially applicable to the question whether Douglass was a superior agent or officer, or person having the right to control or direct the services of the plaintiff with regard to the particular business about which they were engaged, when the injury occurred, because that was the main question considered on the first appeal.

[4] Appellant argues another question: Whether plaintiff's recovery can be sustained, when it appeared that his injury resulted from the use of a machine which was not provided for him by defendant, and not intended by defendant for his use in the performance of his duties, and was not being used for the purpose for which it was intended and furnished by defendant. A moment's reflection suffices to show that this question is involved in and depends upon the decision of the principal question, to wit, whether Douglass was a superior agent or officer, or person having the right to control or direct the plaintiff's services. If he was—and the verdict says he was—he was the representative of the defendant, and the machine which he furnished and the orders which he gave the plaintiff were, in law, the same as if they had been furnished and given by the defendant.

The other questions raised by the exceptions were not argued, presumably because, on mature consideration, they were found to be without merit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Gaston County; Webb, Judge.

Action by Craig & Wilson against Stewart & Jones. From judgment for plaintiffs defendants appeal. New trial.

This action was brought to recover an amount of money alleged to be due the plaintiffs on an order given by one N. L. Lancaster to them, and addressed to defendants, who is claimed, were indebted to Lancaster for work and labor done. The order is not set out in the record, but we gather from the evidence that it required or requested defendants to pay the amount named in the order to plaintiffs. When the order was presented to defendants, they agreed to pay it "out of anything they owed Lancaster," or "out of what might be due Lancaster by them;" and this expression, in substance at least, ran through the whole of the evidence. The jury returned this verdict: "(1) Are the defendants indebted to the plaintiffs? Answer: Yes. (2) If so, in what amount? Answer: $61.50." The judge charged the jury that if the acceptance of the order by the defendants was unconditional, the defendants were bound to pay it, whether they owed Lancaster anything or not, and, if they so found, their answer to the first issue should be, "Yes;" and to the second issue, "$61.50"; or, if they found that it was accepted conditionally, it is, upon condition that defendants would pay it "out of any money that is due Lancaster by them," and they further find that, at the time they accepted the order, there was money due Lancaster to that amount, or that they owed Lancaster the amount after the day on which the order was presented, they should answer the first issue, "Yes," and the second issue, "$61.50"; but, if they found that defendants owed him nothing and the acceptance was conditional, their answer would be "No," to the first issue. Exceptions were duly taken to these instructions, and a motion for a new trial based upon them, and each of them, as erroneous, was overruled. Judgment and appeal by defendants.

Mangum & Woltz, of Gastonia, for appellants. Carpenter & Carpenter, of Gastonia, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] There was error in the charge to the jury. After a careful examination of the evidence, we can find none which tends to prove that the acceptance of the order was unconditional. The testimony of the witnesses on both sides was to the effect that defendants agreed to pay the order, if they owed Lancaster, or whatever amount they owed him. As there was no evidence to support the first branch of the instruction as to the unconditional character of the acceptance, the judge should not have submitted that as a phase of the case, to the jury. Worley & Logging Co., 157 N. C. 490, 73 S. E. 107. The trial judge should not charge the jury upon an aspect of the case which is not supported the evidence. Stewart v. Carpet Co., 188 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562; Jones v. Insurance Co., 153 N. C. 388, 69 S. E. 266, and authorities therein cited. He is required "to state in a plain and correct manner the evidence, and declare and explain the law arising thereon." Pell's Revisal, § 535, and notes.

[2] If defendants accepted the order upon the condition that they would pay it if they were indebted to Lancaster in that amount, that they would pay any amount owing to him, and it turned out that they did not owe him, there would, of course, be no liability to plaintiff; but if they did owe him, and the order was presented to them, or they were notified of it, and especially if they promised to pay it out of any money due Lancaster, they would be liable to the extent of the indebtedness, not exceeding, though, the amount of the order and accrued interest. Brem v. Covington, 104 N. C. 539, 10 S. E. 66. In that case it was held that the order, when duly brought to the notice of the defendant, was in effect an equitable assignment of the amount ordered to be paid, if so much was in the hands of the person upon whom it was drawn.

[3] Plaintiff can recover also upon the acceptance of the order, not treated as an equitable assignment, if the defendants owed Lancaster, as the acceptance would constitute a promise to pay, founded upon a sufficient consideration, viz., the release of Lancaster, and the fact that they owed him which would also support the promise to pay the amount thereof to the plaintiffs, instead of to Lancaster. Brem v. Covington, supra; Mason v. Wilson, 54 N. C. 51, 37 Am. Rep. 612. The last case decides that the statute of frauds has no application where defendants had property of the debtor in their hands with which to pay the debt. If defendants owed Lancaster, plaintiffs will be entitled to recover, in addition to the principal amount, interest from the date on which the order was presented, if the debt to Lancaster was then due. Brem v. Covington, supra.

[4, 5] The jury were further instructed that, if defendants "promised to pay it and accepted it, then they are bound, and the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover." This is erroneous, as there was no evidence to show an absolute promise, but only a conditional one, and, besides, it is objectionable in form, as not addressed to any particular issue. Farrell v. Railroad, 102 N. C. 390, 9 S. E. 302, 3 L. R. A. 647, 11 Am. St. Rep. 760; Baker v. Brem, 103 N. C. 72, 9 S. E. 629, 4 L. R. A. 370. But in a case like this one, where the issues are so simple, we would not grant a new trial on that account, as, in view of the other parts of the charge, it did not mislead the jury, but sufficiently directed their thoughts to the particular issue, though very general in form. The charge should be so framed as to bear upon the issues, and not confined to the right of either party to recover, as if the case was being tried upon the general issue.

[6] The error first pointed out was of such a nature that it passed into the verdict and vitiated it, as we are unable to say under which instruction the jury answered the issues, and must presume, in such a case, that it was the erroneous one. This is the rule where two instructions are so blended and applied to a single issue that the good one is inseparable from the bad. Beam v. Jennings, 96 N. C. 82, 2 S. E. 245; Holmes v. Godwin, 71 N. C. 306; Rowe v. Lumber Co., 183 N. C. 433, 45 S. E. 830.

There also was evidence in this case that defendants owed Lancaster nothing at the time the order was presented or afterwards. They paid him $250, "in compromise and settlement," to get rid of him and in this way buy their peace, as he had threatened them with a lawsuit. We need not consider the question whether an unconditional parol acceptance would be binding, as founded upon a sufficient consideration and not affected by the statute of frauds, as there is no evidence now of such a promise. We have referred to Mason v. Wilson, where it is held that, if the drawee has money belonging to the drawer, the latter's promise to pay the debt of the former to a third person, who is his creditor, is an original and independent one, based upon a new consideration and binding upon the promisor, and not being, therefore, within the statute of frauds. Justice Ashe, in Mason v. Wilson, refers to what is said by Chancellor Kent in Leonard v. Vredenburg, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 28, 39 (5 Am. Dec. 817), which is as follows: "There are, then, three distinct classes of cases on this subject, which require to be discriminated: (1) Cases in which the guaranty or promise is collateral to the principal contract, but is made at the same time, and becomes an essential ground of the credit given to the principal or direct debtor. Here, as we have already seen, is not, nor need be, any other consideration than that moving between the creditor and original debtor. (2) Cases in which the collateral undertaking is subsequent to the creation of the debt, and was not the inducement to it, though the subsisting liability is the ground of the promise, without any distinct and unconnected inducement. Here must be some further consideration shown, having an immediate respect to such liability, for the consideration for the original debt will not attach to this subsequent promise. The cases of Fish v. Hutchinson, 2 Wils. 94, of Charter v. Beckett, 7 Term Rep. 201, and of Wain v. Warters, are samples of this class of cases. (3) A third class of cases, and to which I have already alluded, is when the promise to pay the debt of another arises out of some new and original consideration of benefit or harm moving between the newly contracting parties. The two first classes of cases are within the statute of frauds, but the last is not. 1. Saund. 211, note 2." He then says: "In construing this statute (our act of 1819), it may be laid down as a general rule 'that a promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another for which that other remains liable, must be in writing to satisfy the statute of frauds; contra, when the other does not remain liable.' 1 Smith, L. C. 371. But there are numerous exceptions to the rule." The learned justice also quotes with approval what is said by Judge Pearson in Stanly v. Hendricks, 35 N. C. 86: "The principle is this: When, in consideration of the promise to pay the debt of another, the defendant receives property and realizes the proceeds, the promise is not within the mischief provided against; and the plaintiff may recover on the promise or in an action for money had and received. For although the promise is in words to pay the debt of another and the performance of it discharges that debt, still the consideration was not for the benefit or ease of the original debtor, but for a purpose entirely collateral, so as to create an original and distinct cause of action."

The same principle was enforced in Threadgill v. McLendon, 76 N. C. 24; Hicks v. Critcher, 61 N. C. 353; Hall v. Robinson, 80 N. C. 56; Draughan v. Bunting, 81 N. C. 10; and more recently in Voorhees v. Porter, 134 N. C. 591, 47 S. E. 81, 65 L. R. A. 736, where it was held that a creditor may sue directly a party holding a fund which his debtor has dedicated to the payment of his obligation, the transaction not being within the statute of frauds, but the promise of the holder of the fund or property of the debtor being an original one and not merely super-added to that of the debtor, leaving the latter also liable. In the still more recent case of Peele v. Powell, 156 N. C. 553, 73 S. E. 234, Justice Allen classifies those cases within and those cases without the statute with fine discrimination, and it renders further discussion of the matter superfluous.

For the error in the charge, the case must be tried again.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sampson County; Allen, Judge.

Action by J. H. Turlington against A. W. Aman. From a judgment in his favor for insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The judgment rendered was as follows: "This cause coming on for hearing before Hon. O. H. Allen, judge, and a jury, and the jury having responded to the issues as copied in the minutes of this term, now, upon the verdict, pleadings, exhibits, and admissions of the parties, it is considered, ordered, and adjudged that plaintiff recover of the defendant the sum of $469.62, with interest from March 18, 1907, and the costs of this action. It is adjudged that the plaintiff is not entitled to an order of arrest or execution against the person of the defendant."

This is a motion for execution against the person of the defendant, based on the following facts: A. W. Aman was sheriff of Sampson county in 1901, 1903, and 1905, and he was also, by virtue of his office, the treasurer of the county. He gave bond for the performance of his official duties, the collection of state and county taxes among them, with plaintiff and others as his sureties. In January, 1907, having defaulted, he executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and fled from the state. In the assignment he preferred the sureties on his official bond, and then provided for the payment of his general creditors, who, in the month of January, 1907, about five days after the execution and registration of the assignment, filed a petition in the proper United States court to declare him a bankrupt, alleging therein the assignment, with its preferences as an act of bankruptcy. The sureties, as a measure of prudence preventing the setting aside of the assignment and saving the property, so conveyed for the benefit of themselves and the other creditors, entered into a compromise with the creditors who filed the petition, under the provisions of which the latter were paid off with the proceeds of the property in the hands of the assignee, leaving a balance of $22,000 unpaid, and of this amount plaintiff had to pay $469.22. Plaintiff claims that, as the state and county taxes were paid by the sureties, his share being the amount just stated, he is substituted exactly and fully to the rights and remedies of the creditors, and entitled to a personal execution against defendant, which was one of their remedies, while defendant insists that, as the plaintiff and his cosureties gave up their priority under the assignment by the compromise, which was made with their consent, and as they would have been fully indemnified but for such action on their part, they have waived their right to such an execution. Plaintiff replies that if the compromise had not been made, the property would have been sacrificed, or they would have been subjected to considerable loss in selling the insolvent estate, and, besides, that the filing of the petition and the adjudication of bankruptcy annulled the assignment, and, if not, that it would have been set aside or declared void by the court under the bankruptcy act; the petition having been filed within a few days after the date of the assignment. Defendant admitted the debt.

Issues were submitted to the jury, and answered as follows:

"(1) Did the defendant, A. W. Aman, as sheriff and tax collector and treasurer ex officio of said county of Sampson, make default as such officer, and did he fraudulently convert the public tax money to his own personal account and misapply the same? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Was the plaintiff a surety on said bond, and what amount was he compelled to pay by reason of the fraudulent conduct of the defendant? Answer: $469.62 and interest from March 18, 1907.

"(3) Did the plaintiff and other sureties of A. W. Aman direct F. R. Cooper, assignee of said Aman, to pay off the store creditors of said Aman out of the order of preference named in the deed of assignment? Answer: Yes.

"(4) What amount of money was paid to said store creditors by said assignee under the direction of the plaintiff and other sureties? Answer: $5,000.

"(5) Did plaintiff and the other sureties of A. W. Aman direct Cooper, assignee, to pay off the store accounts of A. W. Aman to prevent A. W. Aman from being thrown into bankruptcy, and said deed of assignment from being set aside? Answer: Yes."

Plaintiff, in due time, objected to the third and fourth issues as irrelevant to the case. The court refused to sign the judgment tendered by the plaintiff, directing that in case the debt could not be levied out of the property, an execution against the person should be issued. Judgment having been entered without this clause, plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Faison & Wright, of Clinton, for appellant.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] There are three kinds of executions: One which is issued against the property of the debtor; another against his person; and still another for the delivery of the possession of real or personal property, or for such delivery with damages, for unlawfully withholding the same. Revisal, § 616. An execution against the person of the debtor may be issued, after the return of an execution against his property unsatisfied, if the action be one in which the defendant might have been arrested. Section 625. Turning to the provisions in regard to arrest and bail, we find that a defendant may be arrested and held to bail, when as a public officer he has received money or property and embezzled or fraudulently misapplied the same, or when he has been guilty of any misconduct or neglect in office. Revisal, § 727. The complaint in this case alleges that defendant embezzled or fraudulently misapplied public funds which had come into his hands as sheriff of the county, which, of course, is also misconduct in office, and the jury, in response to the issues, have found the facts as alleged in the complaint, and the court, in its judgment, refers to these findings, and expressly makes them a part thereof, and this is done with sufficient certainty and formality for the issuance of an execution, if the plaintiff otherwise is entitled thereto.

[2] But we do not think that, in any view, the request of the plaintiff should have been granted—at least as a matter of right—and this brings us to consider the nature of an execution against the person and when it should issue. Our statute once provided that where the right to arrest is determined by the nature of the action, or, in other words, where facts stated in the complaint and necessary to support the cause of action are such as to authorize an arrest, no order of arrest need be obtained before judgment in order to authorize an execution against the body, and, conversely, no execution against the person can issue upon a judgment where no order of arrest has been previously obtained in the action, unless the facts stated in the complaint necessarily import liability to arrest, and unless the cause of action and the cause of arrest are identical. If the grounds of arrest are extrinsic to the cause of action, and the cause of action is not one which of itself would entitle the plaintiff to a body execution, without a prior order of arrest having been granted, the fact that the complaint contains allegations which would entitle the plaintiff to an order of arrest will not authorize the issuance of such an execution. It is not necessary or proper to set forth such facts in the complaint, because they constitute no part of the cause of action, and are not relevant or necessary to be proved. 8 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 622. But this has been somewhat changed by the act of 1891, chapter 541, so as to make it sufficient for the issuance of a personal execution that the complaint alleges a cause of arrest, "whether the same be necessary to the cause of action or not." Pell's Revisal, § 625.

The procedure in all such cases has been fully discussed and settled by us in Ledford v. Emerson, 143 N. C. 527, 55 S. E. 969, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362, and we adhere to what is there said. That case is in perfect accord with Peebles v. Foote, 83 N. C. 102, Huntley v. Hasty, 132 N. C. 280, 43 S. E. 844, and Kinney v. Laughenour, 97 N. C. 326, 2 S. E. 43, when the facts of the several cases are considered, for they differ materially. In the Peebles Case, the statement of the cause for the arrest was not an essential allegation of the principal cause of action, and the court refused the writ because no order of arrest had been previously served, assigning the case to the second class of those in which such an execution can issue, upon the ground that the cause of arrest is collateral and extrinsic to the cause of action. In the Kinney Case, the cause for arrest and the cause of action were identical, seduction of plaintiff's daughter, which was found by the jury, which finding passed into the judgment and was the basis of it. The Huntley Case is in the same category; the two causes being the same, assault and battery. The same may be said of Carroll v. Montgomery, 128 N. C. 278, 38 S. E. 874. The question whether it was necessary that there should be an affirmative finding by the jury of the cause for the arrest upon an issue submitted to them was not therefore presented in those cases, as in three of them such fact was found, and in the Peebles Case the court held that plaintiff was not entitled to the execution, because there was no proper allegation in the complaint, and no order of arrest had been served. We are satisfied with the reasons given in Ledford's Case for requiring a finding by the jury of the cause for the arrest. It is evidently approved in Stewart v. Bryan, 121 N. C. 50, 28 S. E. 20, in which the court said: "It will not do to carry the doctrine of Peebles v. Foote, under section 447 of the Code, as amended by the act of 1891, to the extent contended for in the argument of plaintiff—that, because there is an allegation in the complaint, this fact entitles the plaintiff to an execution against the body of the defendant, whether the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant or not. To sustain this position would be, in effect, to nullify the Constitution." Of course, the judgment referred to is one based upon such a finding of fact, for no one would ever suppose that a plaintiff would be entitled to any kind of execution if he failed to recover in the action. We have discussed this matter, because it might be inferred (Pell's Revisal, § 625, and note) that the Ledford Case was not altogether in harmony with the other cases, when, as we have seen, there is not the least conflict between them, but the other cases fully sustain Ledford v. Emerson. The following authorities sustain the same view: Elwood v. Gardner, 45 N. Y. 354, 355; Smith v. Knapp, 30 N. Y. 531. As to the general practice in such cases, 8 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 622 et seq. We think that McAlden v. Banister, '63 N. C. 478, is virtually to the same effect. It was there determined that the right to a body execution depended upon what appeared in the judgment. Justice Rodman (who was formerly one of the Code Commissioners) says in that case: "The execution must be based on what appears on his docket and nothing else. It may be asked, Was a copy of the affidavit and order of arrest a material part of the justice's judgment, and therefore required to be docketed with it? We are of opinion that, for the purpose of enabling him to issue a personal execution, they were; for this purpose they materially qualified the judgment, and gave it an effect it otherwise would not have. For the issuing of an execution against the lands of the defendant they are not material parts of the judgment, as for this purpose they neither added to nor impaired it."

[3, 4] But it is unnecessary to prolong the discussion of this subject. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that plaintiff is entitled to a personal execution, his motion that an order for it be inserted in the judgment was properly denied, as being premature. The statute prescribes that such an execution can be issued only after a return of an execution against the property unsatisfied in whole or in part. Revisal, § 625. The court could not anticipate such a juncture. There is no finding that the defendant is insolvent. But the statute points out the remedy. It is by motion before the clerk, upon return of the unsatisfied execution, for process against the person. If he refuses it, in a proper case, plaintiff may appeal and have his decision reviewed and reversed. Such was the practice adopted and approved in Kinney v. Laughenour, supra, and Huntley v. Hasty, supra, 8 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. pp. 631, 633. We express no opinion as to plaintiff's right to a personal execution, when properly applied for. He contends that his cause of action is so closely and intimately connected with defendant's wrongful acts, for which he could be arrested, that they form really a part of its "warp and woof," and for that reason he is entitled to the process, citing in support of this view Brandt on Suretyship and Guaranty, section 180, p. 259, and section 177. Again, it may be observed that plaintiff is but one of several sureties on the sheriff's bond, and the question is raised whether he can sue alone, and without them as joint plaintiffs, if he relies upon the equitable doctrine of subrogation. See 1 Brandt, S. & G. (3d Ed.) § 317, and notes, especially note 19 and cases; Hall v. Myers, 90 Ga. 874, 18 S. E. 653; Sheldon on Subrogation, § 27. Must the entire indebtedness be paid and all of the sureties join in one action against the sheriff? Another question is whether the doctrine of subrogation applies to such a case at all, so as to invest the paying surety or sureties with all of the creditor's rights and remedies, so that they may, as one of the remedies, arrest the defendant. Sheldon on Subrogation, §§ 86, 87, 136; Brandt, S. & G. (3d Ed.) §§ 317 (and note), 324, and 325; King v. Kirby, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 49. These and perhaps other questions may arise in the further progress of the case, but we will express no opinion upon them until they are thus reached, and we are required to do so.

There was no error in the judgment, nor in the other rulings to which exception was taken.

No error.

STATE v. ISLEY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 19, 1913.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 67*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—CRIMINAL LIABILITY—INTENT—EVIDENCE.

Where accused obtained supplies from prosecutor on the promise to pay therefor in labor, evidence that he failed to perform the labor, and, on being requested to do so, replied that he "had to get shoes for his children," was insufficient to show an intent to defraud so as to sustain a conviction for obtaining supplies under a promise to pay therefor in labor and willfully failing to perform without lawful excuse and with intent to cheat and defraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Randolph County; Long, Judge.

David Isley was convicted of obtaining supplies under a contract to pay therefor in labor and not furnishing the labor, and he appeals. Reversed.

The defendant was indicted under the following bill of indictment: "The jurors for the state, upon their oaths, present that David Isley on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1912, did willfully and unlawfully and with intent to cheat and defraud J. A. Ellis obtain certain advances in money, fertilizers, corn, flour, provisions, goods, wares, and merchandise from said J. A. Ellis, upon and by color of a certain promise and agreement that the said David Isley would begin work and labor for said J. A. Ellis, from whom said David Isley obtained said money, goods, provisions, merchandise, etc., and the said David Isley making said promise and agreement did unlawfully and willfully fail to commence and complete said work as aforesaid according to contract without a lawful excuse, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided." The defendant entered the plea of not guilty, and on the trial the following evidence was introduced: J. A. Ellis, witness for the state, testified that defendant was his tenant; that he let defendant have certain advances in merchandise, etc., upon defendant's promise to pay for same in work; that defendant failed to do said work, and when witness asked him why he did not come and do the work, defendant said that he had to get some shoes for his children. State rested, and the defendant demurred to the evidence and moved to dismiss under the act of 1913. Motion overruled; defendant excepted. There was a verdict of guilty, and, from the judgment pronounced, the defendant appealed.

R. C. Kelly, of Asheboro, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett, for the State.

ALLEN, J. The decision of this appeal is controlled by State v. Griffin, 154 N. C. 611, 70 S. E. 292, in which the statute under which the defendant is indicted was fully discussed in an elaborate and learned opinion by Associate Justice Brown, and upon the authority of that case the judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the action under chapter 73, Public Laws of 1913.

Reversed.

MARTIN v. OLEGG.

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 196*)—RENT—FAILURE TO DELIVER POSSESSION—DAMAGES—"RENTAL VALUE."

The landlord on breach of a contract by failure to pay rent and on a holding over by the tenant is not confined to the rent stipulated in the lease, but may consider the fair rental value of the property; such "rental value" being, not the probable profits that might accrue to the landlord, but the fair rental value as ascertained by proof of what the premises would rent for, or of facts from which the fair rental value might be determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 787-740; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6094.]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 285*)—EXAMINATION—BRINGING OUT WHOLE TRANSACTION.

In a landlord's action to recover the possession of leased property from the tenant holding over, where the landlord was permitted to show that the fair rental value of the premises from November 1, 1909, to January 1, 1913, above the stipulated rental was a certain amount, it was error to exclude defendant's evidence that the rental value since November 1, 1909, was much less than that claimed by the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1187, 1193-1197, 1199-1204; Dec. Dig. § 285.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by H. T. Martin against W. F. Clegg. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. New trial.

Civil action tried upon these issues: 1. What sum, if anything, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant on account of rents as stipulated in the contracts? Answer: $2,563.56. 2. Did the defendant commit a breach of his contract by failure to pay rents, as agreed in the contract? Answer: Yes. 3. If so, what sum, if anything, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant, by way of damages for wrongful detention of the premises in controversy? Answer: Nothing. 4. Did the defendant, by his conduct and delay for six years or thereabouts, waive the penalty stipulated in the contract? Answer: Yes. 5. If not, what sum, if anything, is the defendant entitled to recover of the plaintiff, on account of the penalty, $20 per month, stipulated in the contract? Answer: Nothing. 6. Did the defendant, before breach of his contract, install in Martin's building radiation as alleged? Answer: No. The defendant excepted and appealed from the judgment rendered.

A. L. Brooks, of Greensboro, for appellant. King & Kimball, of Greensboro, for appellee.

BROWN, J. This action is brought to recover the possession of certain property known as Clegg's Hotel in the city of Greensboro. On October 29, 1909, defendant was served by the sheriff with a written notice by the plaintiff to vacate the premises, for neglect, after due notice, to make payments of rent as stipulated. Defendant, in consequence of this notice, refusing to vacate, but continuing in possession, action was instituted in the superior court on August 28, 1911, to eject the defendant and to recover damages for his holding over.

There are 29 assignments of error, but it is necessary to consider only the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth. These assignments show error upon the part of the court because, as stated in the brief of defendant, "after he had opened the door, and permitted plaintiff to show what the reasonable rental of the property was from July, 1909, to January 1, 1913, declined to permit the defendant to testify with relation to the location of the place, and that it was so situate that you could not always keep it rented, and that there was not always a continuous demand for the stores, and that, in fact, for about three years of the time, one of the stores was not rented." This extract from the brief is borne out by the record. Defendant was sworn as a witness in his own behalf, and upon the question as to the actual rental value of the property after October, 1909, his counsel asked him how much the storeroom was vacant, and he answered, "Three years." This was excluded. The witness was then asked: "Q. Is it a place where you can always keep it rented?" Objection by plaintiff. Sustained. Exception by defendant. And again: "Q. Is there a demand for that store continuously at that rental?" Objection by plaintiff. Objection sustained. Defendant excepts.

[1] The court charged the jury: "If you do not find that he had forfeited his contract, had broken its contract, why then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover simply the stipulated price, $92.51 a month. But if you are satisfied by the greater weight of evidence that the defendant had broken his contract by not paying the rent, then, from that time after he was notified and held over, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover what was a reasonable rental value of the property. To get at that, you will have to take the evidence of the witnesses, together with the stipulated price, that is some evidence of what it was worth, but it is not binding." Again at the request of the plaintiff, the court charged: "The court charges you that if you shall find that the defendant committed a breach of his contract, as alleged, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover from the time of such breach the fair market value of the premises, as you may find the same to be from the evidence, and by its greater weight."

There is no doubt the jury well understood that after October, 1909, when the notice to vacate was served, that, in assessing the rents, they were not to be confined to that stipulated in the contract of lease, but were permitted to consider under the first issue what was the fair rental value of the property. The rule is recently stated by this court in Sloan v. Hart, 150 N. C. 273, 63 S. E. 1039, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 239, 134 Am. St. Rep. 911, as follows: "By rental value is meant, not the probable profits that might accrue to plaintiffs, but the value, as ascertained by proof, of what the premises would rent for, or by evidence of other facts from which the fair rental value may be determined."

[2] The testimony rejected—that defendant was unable to find occupants for the store-rooms for three years; that the place is one not readily rented and not much in demand—is very pertinent upon the fair rental value of the property. The plaintiff was permitted to testify: "That the fair rental value of the premises from November 1, 1909, to January 1, 1913, over and above the rental stipulated in the lease, is $1,529.64." Why the defendant should be prohibited from proving that the rental value since November 1, 1909, is much less than claimed by the plaintiff, we are unable to see. The court erred in excluding such evidence upon the part of the defendant.

New trial.

WHITE SEWING MACH. CO. v. I. W. BULLOCK & CO.

SALES (§ 381*)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—BURDEN OF PROOF—FRAUD AS DEFENSE.

Where, in a seller's action for the breach of a contract for the sale of sewing machines, the defense was that the contract was procured by fraudulent representations of plaintiff's agent, the burden was on defendants to prove that they were induced to contract by such representations, that in consequence thereof they declined to perform, that such representations were calculated to deceive, and did deceive, and that defendants lost something thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1095; Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Granville County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by the White Sewing Machine Company against I. W. Bullock & Co. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hicks & Stem, of Oxford, and T. T. Hicks, of Henderson, for appellant. B. S. Royster, of Oxford, for appellees.

HOKE, J. The action was to recover for breach of contract, evidenced by written order, for the sale of 150 sewing machines at the price of $26, of date October 12, 1910. The defendants admitted the execution of the contract alleged and offered proof tending to show that the same was procured by the false and fraudulent representations of the plaintiff's agent. At a former trial of the cause, the judge below being of opinion that there was no evidence tending to support defendants' position, there was recovery by plaintiff. On appeal, this ruling was reversed, and in an opinion by Associate Justice Walker, containing a full statement of the facts and the principles of law applicable, it was held that the issue as to fraud must be submitted to the jury. See case reported in 161 N. C. 1, 76 S. E. 634. This opinion having been certified down, there was verdict on the issue for defendants, and from judgment on the verdict the present appeal is taken.

The evidence on the part of the defendants tending to establish the alleged fraud is substantially the same as before, except that it now is rather more explicit and direct, and there are some additional supporting facts; and, while there was much testimony in contradiction on the part of the plaintiff, the issue has been fairly submitted to the jury, under the principles laid down as controlling on the former appeal, and we find no reason for disturbing the results of the trial.

It was urged in the argument for plaintiff that the facts in evidence tended clearly to establish that the defendants had decided to break their contract before they were aware of the facts constituting the alleged fraud, and that these facts, therefore, should not be available on the issue; but there was direct evidence on the contrary offered by the defendants, and, in the charge, the disputed fact involved in this position was expressly referred to the jury, and it was determined against the plaintiff.

Again, it was insisted that it was not shown that defendants were in any way damaged by reason of the alleged fraudulent representations. Undoubtedly it is a correct general proposition that fraud without resultant damages does not form the basis for a cause of action; but, if it be conceded that the principle applies here, there was evidence of the defendants tending to show such damage, and the charge of the court was in express recognition of plaintiff's position. On this question the jury were directed as follows: "Now, upon that issue the burden is upon the defendants to satisfy you by the greater weight of evidence that they were induced to sign that order by the false and fraudulent representations of Mr. Massey, and that, in consequence of those false and fraudulent representations, they declined to perform that contract, and that those false and fraudulent representations were calculated to deceive, and did deceive, and intended to deceive, and that the defendants lost something thereby."

On careful perusal of the record, we find no reversible error, and the judgment for defendants must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

McIVER v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.

L. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 296*)—SUMMARY REMEDIES—EJECTMENT.

A summary proceeding in ejectment under Landlord and Tenant Act, Revisal 1905, § 2001, and the following sections, to oust tenants holding over after the expiration of their term, can only be maintained where the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1272-1275, 1283; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 308*)—SUMMARY EJECTMENT—PROCEEDINGS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a summary proceeding in ejectment under the landlord and tenant act, held not to show that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1314-1316; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 315*)—SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS—APPEAL—DISMISSAL OF PROCEEDINGS.

If the relation of landlord and tenant is not shown to exist, so that a summary proceeding in ejectment under Landlord and Tenant Act, Revisal 1905, § 2001, and the following sections could not be maintained, the proceeding should be dismissed by the superior court, on appeal from the justice of the peace, and plaintiff required to bring ejectment in the superior court if he claims title; a new action being necessary even though the superior court had general jurisdiction of both actions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1328-1335; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

Clark, C. J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lee County; Bragaw, Judge.

Summary proceedings, under Landlord and Tenant Act, Revisal 1905, § 2001 et seq., by Duncan E. McIver against the Seaboard Air Line Railway, before a justice. From a judgment in the Superior Court dismissing the proceeding on appeal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

At the conclusion of the evidence, the court held that the title to land was in controversy, and that the justice of the peace had no jurisdiction under the landlord and tenant act, and dismissed the proceeding. Plaintiff excepted and appealed.

A. A. F. Seawell and C. L. Williams, both of Sanford, and L. D. Robinson, of Wadesboro, for appellant. Walter H. Neal, of Laurinburg, for appellee.

BROWN, J. [1] The summary remedy in ejectment provided by the statute for the ousting of tenants who hold over after the expiration of the term is restricted to cases where the relation between the parties is that of landlord and tenant. Hauser v. Morrison, 146 N. C. 248, 59 S. E. 693; McCombs v. Wallace, 68 N. C. 481; Hughes v. Mason, 84 N. C. 472.

As said in McDonald v. Ingram, 124 N. C. 274, 32 S. E. 677: "The only question the court can try under the statute in this proceeding is: 'Was the defendant the tenant of the plaintiff, and does she hold over after the expiration of the tenancy?'"

There is no evidence whatever of a tenancy in this case.

The most that we can make out of the evidence, taking it in its most favorable view for the plaintiff, is that the small piece of land in controversy is covered by a part of the defendant's cotton platform in Sanford; that it was originally constructed by the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railway Company; that the plaintiff claimed the land, but that it was vacant and unoccupied by any one; that the plaintiff told Fry to go ahead and construct his platform over the property; that it was his property. There is no evidence that the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railway Company or this defendant, or any one duly authorized, ever rented the property from the plaintiff, or claimed under him. Not even nominal rent has ever been claimed by the plaintiff or paid by the defendant. The plaintiff, being asked when this indefinite and uncertain transaction took place, says: "I have used every effort to definitely state when this transaction took place, but I cannot do that. My best impression is that it was '96, '97, possibly '95. I do not think, now, it was as late as 1898." There is evidence that at that time the property was claimed and possessed by the defendant under a deed from John Scott to the Raleigh & Augusta Air Line Railroad dated July, 1876.

[2] The evidence is not sufficient to prove that the defendant company ever held possession of the property as a licensee of the plaintiff, much less as a tenant. There is no evidence that this defendant claims under the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railway or succeeded it.

[3] We think if the plaintiff claims title, he should pursue his action of ejectment against the defendant in the superior court.

Affirmed.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting in part) concurs in the opinion of BROWN, J., except in the intimation in the last paragraph that the plaintiff may be put out of court for want of jurisdiction and bring a new action in the superior court. It is contrary to the spirit of our present system of procedure, when a case has gotten in the superior court by appeal, or otherwise, to put the plaintiff out of that court which has full jurisdiction of the cause, because of defect of jurisdiction in the lower court, and tell him to come back into the same court in another method. Cui bono shall this be done when he is already in the proper court? The superior court is a court of general jurisdiction. When a case had been tried in a lower court and gets into that court by appeal, the court is seized of full jurisdiction, and should proceed to dispose of the cause on the merits. This has been required by statute when the appeal is from the clerk to the superior court. The spirit of the Constitution is the same when the appeal is from any other tribunal to the superior court. It is true the practice has been usually otherwise, but not uniformly. McMillan v. Reeves, 102 N. C. 559, 9 S. E. 449, and other cases cited in Wilson v. Ins. Co., 155 N. C. 177, 71 S. E. 79. But such practice it seems to me should not be followed.

This point has heretofore been discussed in State v. McAden, 162 N. C. 578, 77 S. E. 298, citing Cheese Co. v. Pipkin, 155 N. C. 401, 71 S. E. 442, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606; Unitype Co. v. Aschraft, 155 N. C. 71, 71 S. E. 61; Wilson v. Ins. Co., 155 N. C. 177, 71 S. E. 79. It may be that if the matter is called to the attention of the Legislature appropriate legislation may be had in conformity to the Constitution and the spirit of our present procedure, as has been done in regard to appeals from the clerk to the superior court. Or the court may some day so hold, for legislation ought not to be necessary under our Constitution.

The present practice in that matter has not been required by any statute, or by any provision of the Constitution. It has been merely the following by the courts of the procedure which was very proper under the former system of practice. The court at any time can refuse to longer follow it, or the Legislature may require that the practice in this respect shall conform to the spirit of our modern procedure.

CANNON-TORRENCE CO. et al. v. MARLOTT et al.

Appeal of SOUTHERN POWER CO.

TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY—EVIDENCE.

Where, in garnishment of $55, which defendant was claimed to owe M., defendant claimed that it was not indebted, in that M. had defrauded it out of $95 by forging vouchers upon defendant for W., and collecting money ostensibly to reimburse M. for paying the vouchers to W., there was some evidence that W. authorized M. to collect his bill from defendant, which only amounted to $63, an instruction that, if M. was W.'s agent to collect his bill, the $55 belonged to M. was erroneous for ignoring the $32 which M. wrongfully obtained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 613-623; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Webb, Judge.

Action by the Cannon-Torrence Company and H. A. Rhyne against W. H. Marlott and others, in which the Southern Power Company was summoned as garnishee. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the garnishee appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Two actions were commenced before a justice of the peace against the defendants, one in favor of the Cannon-Torrence Company, and the other in favor of H. A. Rhyne, and were tried on appeal in the superior court. When the cases were called, they were, by order of his honor, consolidated and tried together.

The plaintiffs brought their actions against the defendant W. H. Marlott, and at the same time issued attachments or garnishment against any funds in the hands of the Southern Power Company that might be due Marlott. Marlott had been employed by the Southern Power Company as a patrolman of its power lines at Mount Holly, at a salary of $55 per month. At the time of the commencement of these suits, and the issuing of the attachment against the Southern Power Company, Marlott had just lost or quit his job, and it was the intention of the plaintiffs to attach his salary of $55 for the last month he had worked, to wit, August, 1912. The Southern Power Company filed its return to the notice, denying that it was indebted to Marlott in any sum whatsoever. The power company admitted that Marlott had not been paid his salary of $55 for August, 1912, but undertook to show that by means of fraud and false vouchers he had obtained from the power company an amount greatly in excess of this $55, and contended that it should be allowed to set these amounts off against its indebtedness to Marlott.

There was evidence tending to prove that, in the course of his employment at Mount Holly, Marlott frequently had occasion to use teams in patrolling the lines of the power company. These teams he hired from one Alex West. He was supposed to pay for these teams out of funds in his hands, and obtain a receipt or voucher from West for the amount paid. Marlott would present this voucher or receipt of West to the auditor of the power company, and the power company would then reimburse him the amount shown by the voucher to have been paid West. Until Marlott lost his job, the Southern Power Company was under the belief that Marlott had been paying West cash for the teams he hired, and getting the money back from the power company in the manner indicated; but at this time West came over to the Charlotte office of the power company, and informed its general manager that he had a bill against the power company for about $60, for teams furnished Marlott. This was just before Marlott's salary check for the month of August had been paid him. It then developed that, instead of paying for the teams, as the power company had supposed, Marlott had been charging them to the power company. The vouchers or receipts which he had been presenting to the power company purporting to represent money he had paid out in its behalf to West for these teams, and purporting to be signed by West, had not been signed by West at all, but had been forged by Marlott. The amount obtained by Marlott on account of these false vouchers amounted to over $95. When the power company discovered that it owed West over $60 on account of teams, which Marlott represented to it that he had paid for, and when it discovered that Marlott had defrauded it of over $95, it refused to pay Marlott his salary of $55 for August, 1912; the salary being less than the amount obtained by Marlott from the power company.

The claim of West against the power company for hire of teams remaining unpaid amounted to $63.25, which was settled by the payment of $50.

There was evidence on the part of the plaintiffs, which was controverted by the defendant, that Marlott was authorized by West to collect his claim of $63.25.

His honor charged the jury, among other things, as follows: "So, gentlemen, it all turns to the question of agency. If you find that Marlott was the agent of West, and West authorized him to collect this money in the way and manner it was done, and Marlott went and got the money as agent of West, and West authorized him to do it, and he failed to pay it to West, why, then, the court charges you that the power company was no longer indebted to West, and that the $55 belonged to Marlott. But if you find, as I say, that West did not authorize Marlott to collect this money in the way and manner he did; if you find that he did not authorize Marlott to sign his name to these vouchers—why, then, the court charges you that Marlott would be indebted to the power company, and the plaintiff could not recover."

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Was the defendant, the Southern Power Company, in the proceedings of attachment and garnishment in this action, indebted to the defendant, Marlott, in the sum of $55, or any sum? Answer: Yes; $55.

"(2) Is the defendant, the Southern Power Company, indebted to plaintiffs? If so, in what amount? Answer: $55."

Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs, and the power company excepted and appealed.

Osborne, Cocke & Robinson, of Charlotte, for appellant. Brevard Nixon and Campbell Fetner, both of Charlotte, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. The plaintiffs claim that Marlott, an employé of the defendant power company, is indebted to them, and they seek to collect their debt by attaching $55, which they allege the power company owes Marlott as salary for the month of August, 1912. The power company denies that it owes Marlott any sum, because it says he wrongfully collected and misappropriated $95 belonging to it, and that this is more than enough to offset the claim for salary. The plaintiffs reply that the sum of $95 paid to Marlott did not go into his hands as money of the power company; that it was paid to him as the agent of West, and was the money of West, and when it was paid to Marlott it settled his claim, because received by his authority.

His honor submitted these contentions to the jury; but he failed to give any consideration to the evidence of the plaintiffs that the claim which West authorized Marlott to collect amounted to $63.25, and to that of the defendant that he wrongfully collected $95.

If this evidence is true, Marlott collected $63.25 for West, and in addition wrongfully obtained $31.75 of the defendant's money, which could be used as a set-off against the claim for salary.

This view was not presented to the jury, and, on the contrary, the jury was instructed that, if Marlott was the agent of West, "the $55 belonged to Marlott."

In this instruction there is error, because, if he was only authorized to collect $63.25, and he wrongfully collected $95, the defendant would owe Marlott $55, less the difference between the two amounts.

A new trial is ordered.

New trial.

ALLISON et al. v. KENION.

1. EVIDENCE (§ 460*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONSTRUCTION OF DEED—BOUNDARIES.

Where a corner in a deed was established by the parties at the time it was executed, parol evidence is admissible to show at what particular place the corner was established; such evidence being always admissible when there is a latent ambiguity in boundaries.

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—DESCRIPTION—MONUMENT—CONTROLLING ELEMENTS.

Where the parties at the time of the conveyance of land actually made a corner setting up a monument, the boundaries by the monument will govern, notwithstanding errors in the description of the deed when run by courses and distances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 47*)—ESTOPPEL TO DISPUTE.

Where the grantee wrote the deed, measured and located the land, and planted the monument and, so long as he continued the owner, acquiesced in grantor's possession up to the monument, the grantee's grantee is estopped from claiming land of the grantor beyond the point of the monument.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by Amy Allison and others against W. T. Kenion. From judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Civil action involving title to land. It was agreed that the judge should find the facts.

Frank Nash, of Hillsboro, for appellants.
John W. Graham, of Hillsboro, for appellee.

BROWN, J. It appears from the record that William Allison acquired title in fee simple to a lot of land in Hillsboro and on May 17, 1897, conveyed a part of it to E. L. Cooley, who conveyed to Forrest in 1899, who conveyed to defendant in 1905. The only dispute between the plaintiffs and defendant is the location of the dividing line between them, the plaintiffs' southern and the defendant's northern line. The description contained in each of the deeds is as follows: "Commencing at the northwest granite abutment of Eno railroad bridge, near the Hillsboro railroad station, and measuring from point north up Occoneechee street 654 feet on the east side of said street is the established northwest corner of said lot."

The plaintiffs contend that a rock buried one foot in the ground and one foot out of the ground is the true corner and offered evidence to show that, after Cooley had written the deed in William Allison's house, he and Cooley went out, placed that rock where it is now, and told William Allison that the rock was the end of the 654 feet from abutment of bridge, and was southwest corner of Allison's lot. This evidence in due time was objected to by the defendant, and the judge excluded the same. The plaintiffs excepted.

The evidence excluded is as follows: Amy Allison, having been duly sworn, testified: "I am the wife of William Allison, who is now dead, and one of the plaintiffs in this action. Dr. Pride Jones conveyed this land to my husband (the plaintiff had before this introduced the deed of Pride Jones and wife to William Allison, dated September, 1878). We went there to live the November before the deed was made, and we lived there continuously to the death of my husband; and I have lived there continuously since. We cultivated the land in controversy as a garden spot and after my husband's death I cultivated it as such up to April, 1912, when the defendant, Mr. Kenion, took possession of it. I know Mr. E. L. Cooley. He is a business man, and not a lawyer, and is living now, but is out of the state. My husband and I executed the deed to him. (The deed from William Allison and wife, Amy, to E. L. Cooley, dated May 17, 1897, and duly recorded, had been introduced in evidence by the plaintiff.) He came to our house the day the deed was executed; we lived on Occoneechee street; and my husband sold him the lot. He stepped the distance from the abutment of the bridge to the point to which we agreed to sell him, and he said it was 654 feet. The ground from the abutment to the point was very rough, cut up with gullies and full of bushes. Mr. Cooley came in our house, which was near by, and wrote the deed, and we signed it. We then went out to where Mr. Cooley said the measurement stopped, and he put a rock down there, dug a deep hole, and put it (the rock) about one foot in the ground and about one foot out. I asked him if that was the line, and he said it was; 'everything was right and straight, and you will have no more trouble with it;' that rock is still there. Mr. Cooley moved a house out to the lot he bought from us, put up some outbuildings there, and rented it to some mill people, I think. All of the houses were then and are now south of the line running east from the rock on Occoneechee street to the river; and we have cultivated up to the rock line until Mr. Kenion interfered in April, 1912. Mr. Forrest bought this lot from Mr. Cooley, don't know exactly when Mr. Forrest had a well dug, and told me that if I could furnish some hands he would have it dug on the line. I furnished a hand and it was dug on the line running east to the river from the rock (the line claimed by plaintiff as the true line). Mr. Forrest afterwards sold this lot to the defendant, Mr. Kenion, and he was in possession of it up to the rock line, when, last April, after a measurement by Mr. Webb, the county surveyor, he claimed that the 654 feet ran beyond, north of the rock line, and he took possession of the land in controversy at that time and cultivated it for the year 1912. The annual rental value of this piece of land is $25."

[1] We are of opinion that his honor erred in excluding this evidence.

It appears upon the face of the deed that the northwest corner, which is the vital point in this controversy, was established by the parties to the Cooley deed at the time that deed was executed, and it is permissible to prove by parol evidence at what particular place that northwest corner was established by them.

In Sherrod v. Battle, 154 N. C. 353, 70 S. E. 838, Mr. Justice Walker quotes with approval a clear and succinct statement of the law from the New Jersey court: "In settling a question of boundary, when there is a latent ambiguity in the description contained in the deed or a doubt as to the true location of the lines, evidence allunde is admissible to show where the lines are. Boundaries may be proved by every kind of evidence admissible to establish any other fact. The question of construction is a question of law to be decided by the court upon the terms of the instrument itself, and when no latent ambiguity exists it must be decided without evidence allunde; but a question of location or the application of a grant to its proper subject-matter is a question of fact to be determined by the jury by the aid of intrinsic evidence." Opdyke v. Stephens, 28 N. J. Law, 83.

[2] The evidence is admissible upon another ground. It has been held continuously since Cherry v. Slade, 7 N. C. 82, that whenever it can be proved that there was a line actually run and marked, and a corner made at the time of the execution of the deed, for the purpose of establishing the location of the land, the party claiming under it shall hold accordingly, notwithstanding a mistaken description of the land in the deed. In commenting upon that rule, Justice Ashe says in Baxter v. Wilson, 95 N. C. 144: "This construction has been adapted by our court, to carry out the intentions of the parties, when it is clearly made to appear; and, to effect that object, course or distance will be disregarded, if the means of correcting the mistake be furnished by a more certain description in the same deed, and especially will it be so when some monument is erected contemporaneously with the execution of the deed."

The rule is again stated by Henderson, C. J., in Reed v. Shenck, 13 N. C. 415, to be: "Parol evidence, to control the description of land contained in a deed, is in no case admissible, unless where monuments of boundary were erected at the execution of the deed. If the description in the deed varies from these monuments, the former may be controlled by the latter."

In Shaffer v. Gaynor, 117 N. C. 16, 23 S. E. 156, it is held that; "Though parol proof is not, as a rule, admissible to contradict a plain, written description, it is always competent to show by a witness that the parties by a contemporaneous, but not by a subsequent, survey agreed upon a location of lines and corners different from that ascertained by running course and distance." This rule, whether wisely or not, has been recognized and applied in an unbroken line of cases in this state since 1819. Deaver v. Jones, 119 N. C. 598, 26 S. E. 156; Fincannon v. Sudderth, 144 N. C. 587, 57 S. E. 337; Elliott v. Jefferson, 133 N. C. 207, 45 S. E. 558, 64 L. R. A. 135; Higdon v. Rice, 119 N. C. 623, 26 S. E. 256.

This question was last discussed by Justice Hoke in Clarke v. Aldridge, 162 N. C. —, 78 S. E. 216, where it is held that: "Where parties, with a view of making a deed, go on the land and make a physical survey of the same, giving it a boundary which is actually run and marked, and the deed is thereupon made, intending to convey the land which they have surveyed, such land will pass, at least as between the parties or volunteer claimants who hold in privacy, though a different and erroneous description may appear on the face of the deed." Whatever may be thought at this day of the wisdom of this rule of evidence, it must be admitted that it is thoroughly ingrafted upon the jurisprudence of this state.

In line with our precedents, the Supreme Court of Indiana was held that, in a controversy involving the location of a boundary line, fixed by commissioners of partition, monuments fixed at the time and mentioned in the report will control distances, and that in such a case parol evidence is admissible to explain an ambiguity arising from "the omission to describe the monument at one corner." Hedge v. Sims, 29 Ind. 574. This case is cited with approval in Baxter v. Wilson, supra.

It is true that an actual survey by a surveyor was not made of the land conveyed by William Allison to Cooley, but, what is equally as effective, the two parties themselves went on the land, and Cooley himself, if the rejected evidence is to be believed, planted the monument at the northwest corner in Allison's presence and with his consent. Cooley himself wrote the deed, and this was done contemporaneous with its execution, and the deed so written calls for an established northwest corner.

The plain intention of the parties at the execution of the deed was to convey the land up to that rock which they had planted as a muniment of boundary. This is further manifested by the fact that Allison and the plaintiffs, who are his widow and heirs at law, occupied and cultivated the land up to the rock from the date of the Cooley deed in 1897 to 1912, when this defendant, who had purchased from Forrest in 1906, for the first time claimed the parcel of land in controversy.

[3] There is another principle of law, in the nature of an estoppel, which may be invoked in behalf of the plaintiffs. Cooley, the grantee in the deed, wrote the deed, measured and located the land, and planted the monument, and, as long as he owned the land, acquiesced in plaintiff's possession up to it as did his grantees. Having himself surveyed the land, so to speak, under designated lines and corners, marked and established by himself, Cooley and those claiming under him are bound by his own admissions and acts and cannot be permitted to controvert the legal effect of his own conduct to the prejudice of the plaintiffs, especially after long acquiescence. Barker v. Railroad, 125 N. C. 599, 34 S. E. 701, 74 Am. St. Rep. 658. It is said in that case: "There is a clear distinction between cases where the parties themselves have definitely located the land and where it is merely sought to locate it by outside testimony not in the nature of admissions. We think this distinction is recognized inferentially in Massey v. Bellisle, 24 N. C. 177, where the court says: "The stakes may be real boundaries when so intended by the parties, but it is a settled rule of construction with us that when they are mentioned in a deed simply, or with no other added description than that of course and distance, they are intended by the parties, and so understood, to designate imaginary points." If the facts are true, as testified upon the trial, we think the plaintiff is clearly estopped from denying his location of the land and therefore cannot recover. In his concurring opinion in the same case, Chief Justice Faircloth, while differing as to what constitutes color of title, agrees that the plaintiff, having marked the corners at the time, is estopped to contest his own location of the land.

The case we have is much stronger than that, for here the deed itself contains evidence upon its face that a northwest corner was established by the parties, and the parcel evidence excluded does not contradict or vary the terms of the description but only tends to locate the spot where that corner was established. How far this would avail against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice it is needless to discuss, as this defendant does not occupy that position. The deed itself put him upon notice that there was an established northwest corner, and the evidence, if believed, shows that William Allison and those claiming under him occupied and cultivated the land continuously to the rock up to 1912.

His honor having erroneously excluded the evidence offered, his findings and judgment are set aside, and a new trial awarded.

New trial.

ALABAMA GREAT SOUTHERN R. CO. v. BROWN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 18, 1913.)

1. JURY (§ 149*)—MISTRIAL—GROUNDS—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR.

On the trial of the case a jury was stricken and the plaintiff had introduced a part of his evidence. The court ordered a recess until the next morning. During the recess, and for the first time, the defendant's counsel learned that one of the jurors was and had been the guest of the local resident attorney for the plaintiff at his home in the town where the case was being tried. This fact was brought to the attention of the defendant's counsel by the plaintiff's leading counsel, whereupon the counsel with whom the juror was staying brought the matter to the attention of the court, who had the juror informed not to go again to the home of the counsel with whom he was staying, and the juror went elsewhere. Defendant's counsel proposed to plaintiff's counsel that the juror be withdrawn and the trial proceed with 11 jurors, which proposition was declined. On the next morning counsel for defendant brought the foregoing facts to the attention of the court, stating that he was willing for the juror to be withdrawn and for the trial to proceed with 11 jurors. This was again refused by the counsel for the plaintiff. Defendant's counsel then moved that the court declare a mistrial, which motion was overruled. Held, that the court erred in not declaring a mistrial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 635-637; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

2. GROUNDS FOR NEW TRIAL.

Whether receiving the verdict of the jury after the court had ordered a recess until the next morning and, in the absence of the defendant and its counsel, will require a new trial is not decided, as the same facts are not likely to occur on the next trial.

3. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—ADMISSIBILITY—CONCLUSIONS.

The general rule is that a nonexpert witness must state facts and not his opinion, and a nonexpert witness may give his opinion, accompanied by his reasons therefor. It is error for the court to admit an answer of such a witness which states a mere conclusion.

4. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO REQUEST.

The assignments of error dealt with in the fourth and fifth divisions of the opinion are without substantial merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628-641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

Error from Superior Court, Dade County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by J. P. Brown against the Alabama Great Southern Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Maddox, McCamy & Shumate, of Dalton, for plaintiff in error. Foust & Payne, of Chattanooga, Tenn., for defendant in error.

HILL, J. Brown sued the Alabama Great Southern Railway Company for damages for personal injuries to himself and to his team of horses and wagon in which he was riding, alleged to have been caused by the negligent running of its engine and cars. The defendant denied the material allegations of the petition and averred that, if the plaintiff sustained any personal injuries or loss of any property at the time and place alleged in his declaration, it was brought about by his own fault and carelessness and not by the fault of the defendant. The jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. A new trial being denied, the defendant excepted.

[1] 1. After a jury was stricken and the plaintiff had introduced a part of his evidence, the court took a recess until the next morning. During the recess, and for the first time, the defendant's counsel learned that one of the jurors "was and had been the guest of the local resident attorney for plaintiff at the home of said attorney in the town" where the trial was in progress. This fact was brought to the attention of defendant's counsel by plaintiff's leading counsel, who informed defendant's counsel that the juror was the guest of associate counsel for plaintiff. The leading counsel for plaintiff stated to defendant's counsel that he had just learned the fact by hearing the juror say to associate counsel that he was "ready to go home with him." This being brought to the attention of the court by counsel with whom the juror was staying, the court had the juror informed not to go again to the home of counsel, and the juror then went elsewhere. Defendant's counsel proposed to plaintiff's counsel that the juror be withdrawn, and that the trial proceed with 11 jurors. This proposition was refused. On the next morning counsel for the defendant brought the foregoing facts to the attention of the court, stating that he was willing for the juror to be withdrawn and for the trial to proceed with 11 jurors. Plaintiff's counsel refused to accede to this proposition, whereupon defendant's counsel asked the court to declare a mistrial. To the refusal of the court so to do the defendant filed its exceptions pendente lite and assigns such refusal as error. We think that a mistrial should have been declared under the facts stated, which are taken almost literally from the exceptions pendente lite. We construe the statement to mean that the juror had been impeached when the statement was made that he "was and had been the guest of the local resident attorney for the plaintiff." This being true, a mistrial should have been granted as asked for.

In the case of Foster v. Brooks, 6 Ga. 287, 298, Judge Nisbet said: "But to warrant a new trial it is not necessary to show that the juror acted corruptly. The law will guard the trial by a jury from the chances of being corrupted."

In Walker v. Walker, 11 Ga. 208, 209, Judge Warner said: "It is true the affidavit of the juror was produced, in which he states that his verdict was not influenced by the kindness and hospitality of the caveator. But we place our judgment on the principle of the common law, which we consider a safe and salutary rule. When a juror has been impeached to try a cause, and during the trial, and before he has rendered his verdict, he shall be entertained, by either of the parties, at their expense, and the verdict be in favor of the party so entertaining the juror, the verdict will be set aside. * * * This rule is indispensably necessary to preserve the purity and integrity of jury trials in our courts and cannot be too strictly enforced."

In Springer v. State, 34 Ga. 379, page 381, where one of the counsel for the prosecution kept free of charge the horses of some of the jurors for a night, Judge Harris said: "The honor of the bar and the perfect purity of a jury alike demand their entire separation, in their personal and social intercourse, whilst trials are progressing. However harmless in themselves, as was the conduct of our respected brethren in these cases, we feel ourselves called upon, in this and in every case where this separation is not preserved with the utmost care, to evince, in the most decisive manner, our purpose to shut up every avenue through which corruption or the influence of friendship could possibly make an approach to the jury box."

In Salter v. Duffield, 42 Ga. 64, 80, Chief Justice Lochrane said: "There is nothing in which courts will go farther than in their protection of the jury box. Here every precaution is necessary for the proper and pure administration of justice. But in the jury box, if purity and integrity are not preserved, every principle of right and virtue dies. This court has been vigilant in protecting the jury from even the suspicion of injustice."

In Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 364, 414, it was said by Justice Benning: "It is hardly in the power of affidavits wholly to free this affair from suspicion. It is not in the power of affidavits to show that the two jurors were not consciously or unconsciously affected by it."

In Rainy v. State, 100 Ga. 82, 27 S. E. 709, it was held: "Where, during the trial of a criminal case, the jury dispersed, and one of them was entertained at dinner free of charge by an attorney for the state, such conduct on the part of the latter is cause for a new trial, although the counsel for the accused knew of the same before the verdict had been returned. In such case the trial court should not, and this court will not, inquire whether injury resulted to the accused or not, but the verdict, upon principles of sound public policy, will be set aside, to the end that the purity of jury trial may be preserved unimpaired."

In Central Ry. Co. v. Hammond, 109 Ga. 383, 384, 385, 34 S. E. 594, Justice Lewis said: "In the administration of law there is perhaps nothing that is guarded with more vigilance by the judiciary than the conduct of the jury pending the trial of a litigated case. For the sake of public policy, and for the purpose of maintaining and protecting the purity of the jury box, and to insure a fair and impartial trial to litigants, it is the policy of the law that each juror should be kept entirely and absolutely free from any influence which might tend to prejudice or bias his mind in favor of either party to the case on trial." See Smith v. Lovejoy, 62 Ga. 372; Styles v. State, 129 Ga. 425-430, 59 S. E. 249, 12 Ann. Cas. 176.

In 2 Thompson on Trials, § 2564, it is said: "Where a juror has been treated, fed, or entertained by the successful party, or his counsel, or at the expense of either, a new trial will, in nearly all cases, be granted. This rule is, by most courts, deemed indispensably necessary to preserve the integrity of juries. It being, as already stated, a rule of public policy, it will be enforced without reference to the question whether or not the verdict was right." See, also, Merriam on Juries, § 372.

We can have no means of knowing whether the entertainment of the juror influenced him in arriving at his verdict. But, under the previous rulings of this court, it does not matter whether injury resulted to the plaintiff in error or not. The courts will so see to it that the jury are kept free from influences which may tend to bias or prejudice their minds for or against the cause of either party they are impaneled to try. The entertainment of jurors by parties or attorneys interested in the result of the litigation pending the trial cannot be too severely condemned. And the custom of entertaining jurors after they are impaneled to try a case, or "treating" jurors before or after the case is decided, by parties or attorneys in whose favor the verdict is rendered, is reprehensible conduct and should and will be discountenanced by the courts. The streams of justice must be kept pure, and the jury, which in theory as well as in fact is to find the truth of each issue submitted to them, must not be allowed to become corrupted. Jury trial would degenerate into a farce, become a hiss and a byword and the reproach of all good citizens, if outside influences are allowed to be brought to bear upon jurors tending to influence their verdict. We understand the embarrassment which may occasionally result from parties or attorneys being unable to invite a friend who is on the jury to accept their hospitality; but the courts and their instrumentalities must at all times and at all hazards be kept free from possible contaminating influences, to the end that verdicts will speak in reality the truth of each case, and that the conduct of jurors during the trial may be above suspicion, and they be not led into temptation. From the time of Magna Charta all English speaking peoples have rejoiced in the declaration that: "No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, or be disseised of his freehold, or liberties, or free customs, or be outlawed, or exiled, or otherwise destroyed; nor will we not pass upon him, nor condemn him, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. We will sell to no man; we will not deny or defer to any man either justice or right." By this great charter it was solemnly promised that, whether justice is demanded from the palaces of the rich or the cottages of the poor, there is a guaranty that right and justice shall be administered without bias or prejudice to either party. It was made known for all time that jurors, like the bandaged eyes of justice, shall neither see nor know either suitor as they hold the scales with an even and impartial hand.

[2] 2. Error is assigned because the court received the verdict of the jury after the court had ordered a recess until the next morning, and in the absence of movant's counsel, "thus denying movant the privilege of requesting that the jury be polled." Counsel for the movant had left the courtroom and was at a hotel a short distance from the courthouse when the verdict was received by the court. We deem it unnecessary to discuss this ground of the motion, as the facts stated therein will not likely occur again on the next trial.

[3] 3. Error is assigned because the court permitted a witness for the plaintiff to testify, over objection of the defendant's counsel, as follows: "I think the distance between those two marks would suit the distance between the springs of that seat found there. The width of those springs between was about the right space. If the spring hit him I think that would be about right. What the facts are I don't know. I hardly know how to intelligently answer the question how the width of the springs compare with the distance of the different marks on his arm and the distance of the springs apart, but I only answer it in this way. I think it could have been made by the spring." It is objected that this evidence should not have been admitted, because the witness should state the facts and let the jury determine the question as to what caused the injury to the plaintiff's arm, whereas the answer of the witness is a mere conclusion. Undoubtedly the general rule is that a witness should state facts and not his opinion, and a non-expert witness cannot give his opinion unless he also gives the fact or facts upon which he bases his opinion. Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 50 Am. Dec. 329; Mayor, etc., of Milledgeville v. Wood, 114 Ga. 370 (2), 40 S. E. 239; Augusta R. Co. v. Dorsey, 68 Ga. 228 (11). And see 5 Mich. Dig. Ga. R. 520 et seq. The witness frankly states that he does not know what the facts are, and that he hardly knows how to answer intelligently the question as to how the width of the springs compares with the different marks of the arm of the plaintiff, and the distance of the springs apart; and his conclusion is, "I think it could have been made by the spring." This answer can be no more than the mere opinion of the witness, without giving any fact as a basis or as a reason therefor. He could state, if he knew, the distance of the springs apart, and also the distance apart of the marks on the arm of the plaintiff, and let the jury say whether the injury was caused by the springs. The jury would be as competent to draw the correct inference from the facts as the witness. The witness was not testifying as an expert. We think the court erred in not rejecting the answer of the witness.

[4] 4. Complaint is made of the following charge of the court: "Replying to this, the defendant company says that his injuries permanent are slight and that he can do practically as much work now as before; the only injury being to his left arm, as the defendant contends." The criticism is that the defendant contended that it did not cause the injury to the plaintiff and was not responsible for it in any view of the evidence, and that the instruction complained of erroneously stated its defense. We do not think this is a good assignment of error. If the court did not set out correctly, or as fully as desired, the contentions of the defendant, a proper request for additional instructions should have been submitted.

5. The eighth and ninth grounds of the amended motion complain of the failure of the court to charge the jury in substance as therein set out. It does not appear that any request was made that the court instruct the jury as the movant insists should have been done, and there is no merit in these assignments of error.

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 9*)—"GENERAL ELECTION"—SUBMISSION OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The election for members of Congress and presidential electors, required by law to be held on Tuesday after the first Monday in November, is a "general election" within the meaning of article 13, § 1, par. 1, of the Constitution of this state.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 9*)—AMENDMENT—COUNTIES.

The constitutional provision (article 11, § 1, par. 2), limiting the number of counties, may be amended by a proposal to create an additional county, to be ratified by the people in the manner provided in the Constitution, without having previously submitted an amendment for enlarging the number of the counties.

3. DENIAL OF DISCHARGE—HABEAS CORPUS.

There was no error in denying a discharge in this case under writ of habeas corpus.

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; Jas. B. Park, Judge.

Application for writ of habeas corpus by Ben Moore against J. E. Smith. Application denied, and Moore brings error. Affirmed.

The writ of error complains of the ruling of the judge refusing to discharge Marshall Moore from the custody of the warden at the state penitentiary on a writ of habeas corpus. Moore was regularly convicted of murder in the superior court of Wheeler county, and sentenced to the penitentiary for life. The ground upon which it was sought to have him discharged was that the establishment of the county of Wheeler was in violation of the Constitution of the state, and the court proceeding was without authority of law, and the conviction void. Other facts will sufficiently appear in the opinion.

M. B. Calhoun, of Mt. Vernon, and W. L. & Warren Grice, of Hawkinsville, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Wooten, of Eastman, W. S. Mann and Eschol Graham, both of McRae, and C. P. Thompson, of Atlanta, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. 1. An act was approved August 14, 1912, "Acts of 1912" p. 41, proposing an amendment to article 11, section 1, paragraph 2, of the Constitution of this state, as amended in 1904, so as to create a new county, to be known by the name of Wheeler. The act described the boundaries of the proposed county, the location of the county site, and contained other provisions relative to the organization of the county.

Section 2 of the act was as follows: "Be it further enacted, that when this proposed amendment shall be agreed to by two-thirds of the members elected to each of the two houses composing the Legislature of the state of Georgia, such proposed amendment shall be entered upon the journal of each house with the yeas and nays thereon; and the Governor is hereby directed to cause the said proposed amendment to be published in one or more newspapers in each congressional district, at least two months before the time of holding the next general election to be held on Tuesday after the first Monday in November of the year 1912; and he shall also provide for a submission of the proposed amendment at said general election. And, if the people shall ratify such amendment by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly, voting thereon, such amendment shall become a part of the Constitution of the state of Georgia."

Section 3 of the act was as follows: "Be it further enacted, that it shall become the duty of the Governor to submit such amendment to the people at said election in the following form: That those voting in favor of said proposed amendment shall have written or printed on their tickets, 'in favor of the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution creating the county of Wheeler, with the town of Alamo as the county site.' And those opposed to the ratification of said amendment shall have written or printed on their tickets, 'opposed to the ratification of the amendment of the Constitution creating the county of Wheeler with the town of Alamo as the county site,' which votes cast at said election shall be consolidated as now required by law in election for members of the General Assembly, and returns thereon made to the Governor, and, if a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly shall vote in favor of the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution creating the county of Wheeler, with the town of Alamo as county site, the Governor shall declare said amendment adopted and make proclamation of the result of said election in the manner provided by law."

The act received the requisite number of votes in both branches of the Legislature, and after approval by the Governor was duly submitted to be voted upon at the November election, 1912, which was held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, being the time provided by law for the holding of elections for members of Congress and the presidential electors. At such election the requisite number of votes was cast for the amendment, and the Governor declared the amendment adopted and issued his proclamation to that effect.

[1] The point is raised by the applicant for the writ of habeas corpus that the November election was not a general election within the contemplation of article 13, § 1, par. 1, of the Constitution of this state (Civil Code 1910, § 6610), and therefore the submission of the proposed amendment to the Constitution to the voters at the November election was without constitutional authority, and the effort to create the county of Wheeler in the manner stated was violative of both provisions of the Constitution above cited. That part of the Constitution contained in Civil Code 1910, § 6610, was adopted at the constitutional convention of 1877, and was as follows: "Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or House of Representatives, and if the same shall be agreed to by two-thirds of the members elected to each of the two houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon. And the General Assembly shall cause such amendment or amendments to be published in one or more of the newspapers in each congressional district, for two months previous to the time of holding the next general election, and shall also provide for a submission of such proposed amendment or amendments to the people at said next general election; and if the people shall ratify such amendment or amendments by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly, voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the Constitution. When more than one amendment is submitted at one time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment separately." Under this law amendments to the Constitution of the character now under consideration are required to be submitted at the "next general election" to all of the voters of the state for ratification or rejection. The question raised is whether the November election is a "general election" within the meaning of article 13, § 1, par. 1, of the Constitution. Before the adoption of the Constitution of 1877 the Constitution of 1868 declared: "This Constitution may be amended by two-thirds vote of two successive Legislatures, and by submission of the amendment to the qualified voters for final ratification." In that instance the Constitution did not specify how a proposed amendment to the Constitution should be submitted to the people, or the kind of election at which the question should be submitted. Those matters were left open to be dealt with by the Legislature. Under that Constitution the question of the adoption of the amendment might have been submitted to the voters of the state at a special election regularly provided for that purpose, by the Legislature, or at any general election, as the Legislature might see fit to direct. When the constitutional convention of 1877 dealt with the same matter there was a material departure, in that a proposed amendment was not required to be voted for at two successive sessions of the Legislature, and additionally to be submitted to the voters of the state at any election; but the requirement was that the proposed amendment should receive a specified vote at one session of the Legislature, and that the proposed amendment should be submitted to the voters at "the next general election." In 1868, and in 1877 the conventions, upon adjournment, were to go out of existence. The necessity for possible amendments to the Constitution then being adopted was in the mind of the members of the convention, who had been elected by the people, and in each instance it was deemed proper to make provision for such amendment without another convention, but in doing so care was taken that no amendment should be made without being submitted to the voters of the state for ratification. As indicated above, in 1868 the time and manner of submitting the question was not specified in that Constitution, but in 1877 it was. In the latter Constitution it was to be submitted at the next general election. The term "general election" was not defined, but that term, as employed, evidently contemplated an election to be held at a fixed time after a specified notice, at which all the qualified voters of the state should have an opportunity to express their choice on the question of ratification of the amendment. Owing to the gravity of the question to be voted on, a full expression of the voters was desired. If submitted at a "general election," after notice to the people as provided, the tendency would be to have a fuller vote than at a special election, where the only question to be voted on was that of the adoption of the amendment. Other consistent reasons might be suggested for providing that the question should be voted on at a general election. The designation of the "next" general election was merely to fix the time for submission to the voters, taking into consideration the existing conditions.

When the Constitution of 1877 was adopted, the act approved August 20, 1872 (Acts 1872, p. 29) was in effect. By this act it was provided that elections for members of Congress and presidential electors should be held biennially on Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Elections for county officers should be held on the first Wednesday in January of the years in which, under the Constitution and laws of the state, elections should be held to fill such offices. And, lastly, that elections for all other officers of this state should be held the first Wednesday in October. Each of the three classes of elections mentioned were required to be held the same day in each county of the state, and the qualification for voters was the same for all of them. Each election, therefore, was a general election throughout the state, and all voters qualified to vote at them were qualified to vote on the adoption of the constitutional amendment. Proper submission to the voters of the state was the object sought. That object could be accomplished in any one of the three elections above mentioned, which might happen to occur at a time when it was practicable to publish the notice required. The elections were all state elections, and no reason appears why the question of ratification should not be submitted at one class as well as another. There was no fixed date at which a proposed amendment might be submitted, and what might be the "next general election" after the adoption and approval of the act, occurring at a time when the notice could be given, would be indefinite. It could be one or the other of the three general elections. Under these circumstances, the framers of the Constitution, without attempting to specify one class of the elections rather than the other, merely provided that the question should be submitted at the "next general election," occurring at a time when the notice of the submission of the proposed amendment to the Constitution could be duly published.

Counsel for plaintiff in error insist that the election contemplated in article 13, § 1, par. 1, of the Constitution of 1877, to which the question of amendment should be submitted, was intended to apply only to the October election, rather than the November election, but we fail to see any ground for this contention. To give the Constitution this construction would also eliminate the January election; yet at the January election, as well as the November election, there would be the same facilities for expression by the voters of the state, and probably as large vote as if it were submitted at the October election. Under these views it was proper to submit for ratification the proposed amendment to the Constitution, for the purpose of creating the county of Wheeler, at the November election.

[2] 2. It was urged that the creation of Wheeler county in the manner indicated above was violative of article 11, § 2, par. 1 of the Constitution. So far as necessary it be stated, this provision of the Constitution (Civil Code, § 6595) declares: "There shall be no more than one hundred and forty-two counties in this state: Provided, however, that in addition to the counties now provided for by this Constitution there shall be a new county laid out from the counties of Lincoln and Wilcox," to be known as Beaumont county. This contention of counsel for plaintiff in error is based on the fact that the creation of Wheeler county would add another county to the already existing 142 counties, limited as above, and it insists that before an amendment could be submitted to create Wheeler county, it would be necessary to change the limitation restricting the number of counties in this state. There is no basis for these contentions. The ratification of the amendment for the creation of Wheeler county makes that amendment a part of the Constitution, and places in the proviso a new county. To that extent it modifies the provisions of the Constitution limiting the number of counties to 142.

[3] 3. The grounds urged for the discharge of the prisoner upon the writ of habeas corpus were insufficient for the ground of that relief, and the judge committed no error in refusing to discharge him.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1914.)

1. CARRIERS (§§ 85, 86*)—FREIGHT SHIPMENT.—NOTICE TO CONSIGNEE.

Where shipments of lumber in car load lots were consigned to a person at a named city, and were transported to their destination on the railroad on which they were shipped, and the consignee was given notice and afforded opportunity to receive and unload the lumber, the liability of the railroad company as a common carrier ceased. In the absence of any valid rule of the railroad commission, contract or custom raising such a duty, it was not bound at the request of the consignee, to deliver the cars to another carrier, to be transported to a different part of the same city, where the consignee desired to ship such lumber by steamship.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Action by J. M. Dixon against the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Dixon, doing business as the Dixon Lumber Company, obtained an interlocutory injunction against the Seaboard Air Line Railway to restrain the defendant from collecting and enforcing demurrage on cars of lumber which were consigned to the plaintiff at Savannah and carried to that place, but which the plaintiff desired to have transported to steamship wharves in another part of the city, which were reached by the tracks of another railroad company. The defendant was also enjoined from "collecting or attempting to collect such demurrage by refusing to carry such cars before demurrage is paid." The defendant denied that it was a common carrier in connection with the other railroad company from its yards to the steamship wharves, and asserted that the car loads of lumber came over its road consigned to the plaintiff at Savannah, and that upon arrival at their destination, notice was given to the plaintiff, and demurrage began to run after 48 hours. It further alleged that the only practice as to the delivery of such cars to the Central of Georgia Railway Company was that the plaintiff would give orders to the last-named company to take from the defendant certain designated cars, that the agent of the Central Railway Company would then transmit to the agent of the defendant such instructions as to the cars desired, and the defendant would thereupon deliver the cars so ordered to the Central Railway Company for delivery to the Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Company, or at whatever point the plaintiff designated in his order to the Central Railway Company. To the grant of the injunction the defendant excepted. The other facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Anderson, Cann & Cann and Thos. F. Walsh, all of Savannah, for plaintiff in error. Osborne & Lawrence, of Savannah, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. If the plaintiff had cause for injunction against the defendant railroad company, it was because of some impending wrong which the latter was about to commit on the former. The alleged wrong was a violation of the duty of the railroad company as a common carrier. If there was any such duty, it must have been imposed by legislative enactment, by valid rule of the railroad commission, by contract, or by custom. Was such a duty, arising from any of these sources shown?

In Coles, Simkins & Co. v. Central Railroad & Banking Co., 86 Ga. 251, 12 S. E. 749, State v. Wrightsville & Tennille R. Co., 104 Ga. 437, 30 S. E. 891, and Central Ry. Co. v. Murphey, 116 Ga. 866, 43 S. E. 265, 60 L. R. A. 817, it was held that there was no law which required a railroad company to make a contract to forward goods beyond its own line. The question of the power of the Legislature or the railroad commission was not determined. Under these rulings, whether or not it will adopt a custom of issuing through bills of lading, at least as to intrastate freight, is optional, not compulsory. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co., 122 Ga. 648, 50 S. E. 473, 69 L. R. A. 119. Even had it been shown that the company had, on certain occasions, transported cars from the initial point of the shipment to a terminal point beyond its line, this would not alone suffice to impose on it the duty of doing so. Coles v. Central Railroad, etc., Co., supra.

[1] But there was no evidence that the railroad company had transported any lumber beyond its own yards except upon request or order from the Central Railway Company. When the Seaboard Air Line Railway received at various points car loads of lumber consigned to Dixon at Savannah, and transported such cars to the point of destination—that is, to the usual place of delivery of such cars on its line in Savannah—and gave the consignee due notice and opportunity to receive and carry away the lumber, its liability as a common carrier ceased, in the absence of a law, valid rule of the railroad commission, custom, or usage to deliver the cars to another company for transportation to a different part of the same city. No statute or rule of the railroad commission raising such a duty has been shown. Civil Code, § 2655, does not apply to such a case. These were not through shipments of goods which had not reached their destination, and the shipments were not consigned to any point on the Central Railroad or beyond the terminus of the Seaboard Air Line Railway; nor is this a question of delivery to be made to a consignee on a private siding on the line of the road of a connecting carrier. The defendant, having complied with its contract, was not bound to deliver the loaded cars to another railroad to be transported by its line across the city except as the case may be affected by a custom. It was alleged by the plaintiff that the Seaboard Air Line Railway and the Central of Georgia Railway Company were, as common carriers, engaged in the business of transporting goods from the yards of the former to the wharves of steamship companies, which were reached by the line of the latter. But the evidence failed to show that they jointly conducted the business of making such transportation. There being no law requiring such delivery by the Seaboard Air Line Railway of cars which had reached their destination to another carrier for more convenient delivery to the same consignee at the steamship wharves, unless it appeared that there was a custom or usage of such generality as to become binding, the Seaboard Air Line Railway would not be liable for a failure or refusal to make such delivery to the other carrier. Melbourne v. L. & N. R. Co., 88 Ala. 443, 6 South. 762; Palmer v. Atchison, etc., 101 Cal. 187, 35 Pac. 480.

[2] In so far as a custom or usage is relied on by the plaintiff to impose a duty on the Seaboard Air Line Railway, he must rely on the custom as proved. This was that upon application by the Central of Georgia Railway Company, the Seaboard Air Line Railway would deliver cars of lumber to the former to be transported to the steamship company's wharf. The Seaboard Air Line Railway collected a charge for this service, and paid it to the Central of Georgia Railway Company, receiving no compensation for itself. It did not appear that either the steamship company or the Central of Georgia Railway Company had at the wharf any yards or provisions for receiving and holding quantities of lumber until they could be loaded on a ship. It has been held that a steamship company is not compelled to receive more freight than it has means of carrying. Ocean Steamship Co. of Savannah v. Savannah Locomotive Works, etc., Co., 131 Ga. 831, 63 S. E. 577, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867, 127 Am. St. Rep. 265, 15 Ann. Cas. 1044. It cannot be that the lumber dealer would have the right to compel the Seaboard Air Line Railway, after carrying the freight to its destination, to send it forward to the steamship wharf regardless of the ability of the latter to receive it. If this dealer had that right, so had every other dealer in the city of Savannah. As there was no through shipment or contract to transport the lumber to the steamship wharf, but only to the city of Savannah, and as the Seaboard Air Line Railway completed its contract of transportation, and as the plaintiff must rely, not upon any contract or legislative act or rule of the railroad commission, but upon custom, as raising a duty on the part of that company to deliver the cars to another carrier for more convenient delivery to him in another part of the city, he must rely on the custom as proved. And as proved, the duty on the part of the Seaboard Air Line Railway to deliver cars of lumber to the Central of Georgia Railway Company did not arise until notice from the latter, upon application of the lumber dealer to the steamship company or to the Central of Georgia Railway Company.

It is argued that this works a great hardship on the plaintiff, as he is compelled to pay demurrage, in order to have the cars, which arrive at Savannah loaded with lumber, remain on the tracks of the Seaboard Air Line Railway until called for. But the plaintiff is not compelled to do this. He ships the lumber to Savannah. When it arrives at its destination he can receive it, and re-ship it when he desires to do so. If, instead of unloading the lumber and keeping it in his yard, he prefers to let it remain upon the cars, it is at his desire.

It follows from what has been said that the grant of an interlocutory injunction restraining the Seaboard Air Line Railway from collecting and enforcing demurrage upon car loads of lumber which had been transported to the destination thereof, and which the consignees desired that company to have carried to the steamship wharves, and from collecting or attempting to collect such demurrage as might accrue before notice from the Central of Georgia Railway Company, was erroneous.

The ruling here made renders it unnecessary to consider whether or not the injunction granted was mandatory in character.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

1. MORTGAGES (§ 468*)—FORECLOSURE—RECEIVER.

Error from Superior Court, Hall County; J. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by J. & J. S. Carter and others against the Planters' Oil Mill. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

On March 6, 1913, J. & J. S. Carter, Georgia Railway & Power Company, Z. T. Castleberry, J. S. Carter, H. H. Dean, Mrs. A. M. Jaquish, and G. F. Hughes brought an equitable petition against the Planters' Oil Mill, the Gainesville Cotton Oil Company (domestic corporations), J. C. Cooper, Marshall C. McKenzie, and Harold C. McKenzie. The substance of the material allegations of the petition was as follows: On April 11, 1912, the Planters' Oil Mill, hereinafter referred to as the defendant, or mortgagor, duly executed 17 promissory notes, aggregating the sum of $34,339.12, four of which were for $1,000 each payable to J. & J. S. Carter, and due respectively on July 1, August 1, October 1, and November 1, 1912; four were for $5,000 each, payable to J. & J. S. Carter, one on January 5, and the other three on April 1, 1913; two were for $2,500 each payable to J. & J. S. Carter on April 1, 1913; one was for $1,815, payable to J. & J. S. Carter on April 1, 1913; one was for $719.12 payable to the Georgia Railway & Power Company on April 1, 1913; one was for $540, and another for $1,570 payable to H. H. Dean on April 1, 1913; one was for $400 payable to Z. T. Castleberry on April 1, 1913; one was for $417 payable to Mrs. A. M. Jaquish on April 1, 1913; and one was for $78 payable to G. F. Hughes on April 1, 1913. At the time these notes were given, the defendant executed and delivered to the payees thereof, to secure the payment of the same, a mortgage upon its entire oil mill plant, including realty and personalty of every description connected therewith. The mortgage contained the stipulations that, if default should be made in the payment of any one of the notes, then all should become due, at the option of the holders, with a right to then foreclose; and that the mortgagor should at all times keep the mortgaged property insured to the amount of $27,000, the policy, in case of loss by fire, payable to the mortgagees as their several interests may appear, and, upon default of the mortgagor to keep the property so insured, that the mortgagees, or any one or more of them, should have the right to have the property insured for the amount above named, and that all money so paid for insurance should become a part of the mortgage debt and be secured by the mortgage lien. The first two notes for $1,000 each, payable to J. & J. S. Carter, were paid. The other two notes for $1,000 each, and the one for $5,000 due January 5, 1913, payable to J. & J. S. Carter, have not been paid, and the defendant has been notified by petitioners that they have elected to declare all the notes due, in accordance with their option so to do contained in the mortgage. The $5,000 note just mentioned was transferred to and belongs to the First National Bank of Gainesville,

Ga., and so does the note for $540 payable to H. H. Dean. (The bank is not a party to the suit.)

It is alleged that the defendant "is insolvent and unable to pay its indebtedness; that said material and said machinery is depreciating in value; that the same is not worth more than the amount of your petitioners' claims; that, if the said defendant is allowed to keep and run the said mill and machinery, it will greatly depreciate in value, and will result in great loss to your petitioners." On September 19, 1912, the defendant leased its oil mill plant for the season of 1912 and 1913, terminating on July 1, 1913, to the Gainesville Cotton Oil Company, in pursuance of a contract entered into by the latter company, Marshall C. and Harold C. McKenzie, and the defendant; by the terms of which agreement the defendant, after certain named expenses in the operation of the plant were paid, was to receive one-half of the net profits. To better secure the payment of the notes held by petitioners, the lease contract was transferred and assigned to them by the defendant and the Gainesville Cotton Oil Company, on February 17, 1913. The transfer stipulated that "all profits arising from said lease contract to be prorated upon their respective claims." In reference to the lease, "your petitioners show that said profits have been made by running and operating said mill, and that they have not been ascertained or paid." The defendant insured the mortgaged property for $30,000 or $35,000, but has failed to pay the premiums, and the insurance companies are threatening to cancel the policies, and will do so unless the premiums be paid. Among other things, the petition prayed that a receiver be appointed for the Planters' Oil Mill, and that the Gainesville Cotton Oil Company, and the McKenzies be enjoined from paying to the Planters' Oil Mill any of the profits derived from the operation of its plant, and that the mortgage be foreclosed. In an amendment to the petition it was alleged that the defendant had failed to pay its state, county, and municipal taxes for the year 1912; that executions had been issued for such taxes, which would be enforced against the property of the defendant unless their collection was restrained; and that a number of common-law judgments had been rendered against the defendants in favor of various creditors, who would put it in bankruptcy unless a receiver was appointed by the state court to take charge of its assets.

In its answer, the defendant denied its liability on the notes to the amount set out in the petition, and averred that there was a failure of consideration to the amount of at least $25,000 represented by the notes. It denied that it was insolvent, and averred that it was in better financial condition than at the time the mortgage was executed. It further denied that the mortgage property had depreciated in value, and averred that the machinery in its plant had been added to and its value increased since the execution of the mortgage, and that the value of the mortgaged property was much greater than the claims of the plaintiffs. In the language of the answer: "Defendant admits that it has not paid the said insurance premiums, and unless they have already been paid this defendant is ready to cause or procure the same to be paid." The defendant "amends its answer by offering to cause the taxes or tax à. fas. against defendant, set forth in the amendment to petition of plaintiffs, to be taken up and held so as not to be enforceable until after a final decree in this cause."

Upon the interlocutory hearing for a receivership, J. Carter, of the firm of J. & J. S. Carter, testified as follows: "All they [Planters' Oil Mill] owe is in that mortgage they gave. They didn't owe us [J. & J. S. Carter] anything individually at the time they gave the mortgage. They owed us on several notes we were indorsers on; the State National Bank of Greenville $7,200, another for $5,000, and another for $2,700. The notes and the mortgage were given to secure the notes which we had indorsed for them in Carolina and here in Georgia, and were given to take the place of those notes which we had indorsed. They gave us these notes secured by the mortgage, and we were to take up the other notes we were indorser on. I haven't taken up those notes, and they are still outstanding against the Planters' Oil Mill, and those notes together with the notes we are suing on make a double liability against the Planters' Oil Mill. I haven't paid any on these notes outstanding. I have been trying to get the money from the Planters' Oil Mill to pay them with. I have paid interest on some of the outstanding notes; how much I don't remember. The Planters' Oil Mill paid this interest for a while, and when they stopped we started suit. $14,700 of the $27,000 I am suing on represents debts that were against the Planters' Oil Mill before I gave up its management. The consideration of the mortgage I am suing on, as I understand it, was that we should take up these outstanding notes, and that the mortgage and notes sued on were given in lieu of the notes outstanding." He further testified: "These notes which are payable to our order were taken that way for convenience, and they were to be substituted for the other outstanding indebtedness. I gave one of them to Mr. Castleberry and one to the First National Bank. I hold these notes as collateral to the South Carolina notes. I gave my individual note for one of the South Carolina notes, and I hold these notes to protect my indorsement. When these notes are paid that will settle all liability existing against the Planters' Oil Mill at the time. * * * I did agree to take up these outstanding notes when this mortgage was given. That $5,000 note is not still outstanding. When I turned over the new note to the bank that one was settled. I can't tell you anything about the $5,000 note to the First National Bank. I haven't paid this new note for $5,000. We have paid and renewed several times. I wouldn't pretend that I have or haven't paid any $5,000 note. Since the 1st day of April, 1912, I have not paid any $5,000 note for the Planters' Oil Mill to the First National Bank. Personally, I have not paid any debt of the Planters' Oil Mill since the date named. Neither has the firm of J. & J. S. Carter, that I know of."

It was shown that the mortgagor owed state, county, and municipal taxes, aggregating $386.13, for the year 1912; that executions had been issued for the same; that a common-law judgment for $300 principal had been rendered against the Planters' Oil Mill since the execution of the mortgage; and that a suit was pending against the oil mill on a promissory note for $550 principal. As to the value of the mortgaged property the testimony of the witnesses for the mortgagees was as follows: J. Carter testified: "I can't say whether the mill is as valuable now as it was when the mortgage was made. I haven't been through the mill in a year. I don't know of any deterioration in the value of the mill from the time we took the mortgage to the present time; only I know that it depreciates in value when they are run. I can't specify any particular deterioration, except that I know of a motor that was burned out. * * * I can't say what the mill was worth when I took the mortgage. It had cost about $40,000 up to that time. It was a good mill. * * * There was some new machinery in there. * * * I don't know that it was worth $50,000. I guess it had cost $50,000 in 1912. I didn't value it at $50,000 then. * * * I don't think it could be built for $50,000. * * * The mill would not bring $50,000 at this season of the year. Yes, sir; it will bring the amount of this indebtedness. * * * An oil mill will depreciate 15 per cent. with a year's run; sometimes as much as 25 per cent. It is owing to the kind of management. With a good superintendent it will not depreciate more than from 10 to 20 per cent. This mill had been running for three years. * * * When I took the mortgage I knew that the mill would depreciate in value, and I took the mortgage in full faith of that information. When Cooper bought the mill [about three years prior to the hearing] it was pretty well run down, as the season was just over. It is true that under Cooper's management the mill has been materially improved, and is well worth all it cost." Castleberry, one of the mortgagees, testified: "It would be hard to tell whether the mill would bring over $25,000. I haven't been through the mill since the year before Mr. Carter sold it [about four years prior to the hearing]. To just guess at it, I would say the mill is worth $25,000 or $30,000." Dean, another mortgagee, testified: "I think that $30,000 would be a high price for it [the mill]. I went into the mill when it was taken over by Mr. Carter and Mr. Castleberry. It never did pay any dividends, and has lost money, so far as I could see, every year. I have heard about it making some money, but I don't know about it. * * * I know this, that a mill that don't belong to the trust is a pretty bad piece of property." The testimony in behalf of the mortgagor was to the effect that the mortgaged property was worth about $40,000, and that it was in better condition at the time of the hearing than at the date of the mortgage, as the repairs made and new machinery put in more than offset the natural wear and tear of the machinery by use.

The judge passed the following order: "That if the defendant company, Planters' Oil Mill, will within ten days from this date pay or have paid off the state and county taxes and the city fl. fas., and have issued and paid for insurance on its oil mill property in the sum of $27,000, payable to the mortgagees as their several interests may appear, in the event of loss by fire, application for permanent receiver is hereby refused, and the temporary receiver discharged. * * * Should the requirement as to payment of taxes and procurement of insurance not be met as herein required, then Hugh Montgomery is hereby made permanent receiver for said property as prayed, on his making bond in the sum of $5,000 for the faithful performance of his duties as permanent receiver," etc. To this judgment the mortgagor excepted.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] "Receivers are not appointed as matter of right, but to preserve rights." "The power of appointing receivers and ordering injunctions should be prudently and cautiously exercised, and except in clear and urgent cases should not be resorted to." Civ. Code, § 5477. The principal ground on which courts of equity are called upon to lend their extraordinary aid by the appointment of receivers over mortgaged property is the inadequacy of the security for the payment of the mortgage indebtedness. This inadequacy consists of two elements, viz., the insufficiency of the mortgaged premises per se as a fund for the payment of the debt, and the insolvency of the mortgagor or other person primarily liable for the indebtedness, whose duty it is to make good any deficiency in the security. Stated in general terms, the well-established rule, deducible from the clear weight of authority, is that in all cases where the rents of the property are not specifically pledged as security for the debt, to entitle the mortgagee to a receiver for the mortgaged premises, and for the rents and profits, he must show: First, that the property itself is an inadequate security for the debt with interest and costs of suit; and, second, that the mortgagor, or other person who is personally liable for the payment, is insolvent, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or of such doubtful responsibility that an action against him for the deficiency would prove unavailing. High on Receivers, § 666. In the application of this rule, the courts require satisfactory proof, both as to the inadequacy of the security and the insolvency of the mortgagor or other person liable for the debt; and, unless both these conditions are shown to exist, no satisfactory cause is presented to warrant the interference of equity. Id. § 667. See, to the same effect, Beach on Receivers, § 524; Alderson on Receivers, § 417 et seq.; and the many adjudicated cases cited by these authors. In the case at bar it is manifest that the plaintiffs, according to the evidence which we have been at some pains to particularly set forth, did not show a clear and urgent case for a receivership over the mortgaged property in order to preserve their rights. According to the evidence of the plaintiffs themselves, who testified on the hearing the mortgaged property was amply sufficient for the payment of all the mortgage indebtedness, as well as the taxes due on the property and any premiums for insurance that the mortgagees might advance. Indeed, if the notes payable to J. & J. S. Carter did not, in their hands, represent a valid indebtedness against the mortgagor, because of a failure of consideration (which is seemingly true), then the value of the mortgaged property was something like at least five times as great as the valid mortgage indebtedness. Moreover, under the evidence submitted in behalf of the plaintiffs, it could not be said that the mortgagor was shown to be insolvent. Again, it appeared that the mortgagor had leased the mill plant, and had transferred the lease to the mortgagees, in order that they might be entitled to receive whatever profits might accrue from the operation of the mill by the lessees, as further security for the mortgage indebtedness, and that the term of the lease had not expired.

[2] From the nature of the order passed by the trial judge, we assume that he was of the opinion, from the evidence submitted to him, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a receivership on the ground of the inadequacy of their security and the insolvency of the mortgagor; but, as the mortgagor had suffered taxes to remain unpaid, and had failed to keep up the insurance on the mill property, that a receiver should be appointed unless the taxes should be paid and the insurance procured by the mortgagor. Under the facts of the case, we cannot concur in this view. There was a stipulation in the mortgage to the effect that the mortgagor should procure insurance on the mill property in a given amount, and should keep it up for the benefit of the mortgagees; and, in the event of its failure to do so, then the mortgagees might have the property insured for a like amount, and the cost of insurance should become a part of the mortgage indebtedness. In view of this agreement, we are of the opinion that the failure of the mortgagor as to the insurance was not cause for the appointment of a receiver, as the mortgagees had the right, under the contract, to protect their security in this respect; especially when the excess of the value of the property over the indebtedness is considered. The exact point was before the Supreme Court of Idaho in the case of Eureka Mining, etc., Co. v. Lewiston Navigation Co., 12 Idaho, 472, 86 Pac. 49, and it was held: "Where a mortgage provides that the mortgagor shall keep the property insured, and that in case he fails to do so the mortgagee may insure, and that all sums paid by the mortgagee for insurance shall become a part of the mortgage debt and be secured by the mortgage lien, a failure to insure by the mortgagor will not amount to such waste of the security as to authorize the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property." In Ray v. Carlisle, 125 Ga. 318, 54 S. E. 119, it was held: "Even if the claims of the plaintiff were of such character that the property in controversy was either legally or equitably charged with their payment, the fact that the building is uninsured, and in the event of its destruction by fire the land could not be sold for a sum sufficient to pay the amount claimed by the plaintiff, does not constitute such a 'manifest danger of loss or destruction' of the property * * * to take charge of the same and impound the rents therefrom."

[3] In view of the evidence showing the value of the mortgaged property so largely in excess of the valid indebtedness secured by the mortgage, the mere fact that the mortgagor suffered the state, county, and municipal taxes to the amount of $366.13 to accumulate and remain unpaid did not authorize the appointment of a receiver. It was not made to appear that the security of the mortgagees would manifestly be impaired, even if a sale of a portion of the mortgaged property should be sold for taxes. It was not shown that the property was of such character that the executions could not be levied upon some separable part thereof which could be sold without interrupting the operation of the mill.

EVANS, P. J. The action was for divorce by Mrs. Lillie O. Anderson against her husband, Walter A. Anderson, on the grounds of cruel treatment and habitual intoxication. The defendant filed a cross-libel, praying that he be granted a divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery. The court refused to allow the wife to testify to any fact tending to support her petition, on the ground that the defendant's cross-libel, being based on a charge of adultery, rendered her an incompetent witness; and for the same reason refused to allow her to testify denying the charges of adultery set out in the cross-libel. A verdict was rendered for the defendant.

The wife's libel was based on the grounds of cruel treatment and habitual intoxication. The husband denied all allegations of cruel treatment, and by way of cross-libel charged the libelant with having committed the offense of adultery, and prayed a divorce on that ground. Our Code provides that: "When a libel for divorce is instituted, the respondent may, in his or her plea and answer, recriminate, and ask a divorce in his or her favor; and if on the trial the jury believe such party is entitled to divorce instead of the libelant, they may so find upon legal proof, so as to avoid the necessity of a cross-action." Civil Code 1910, § 2952. To a libel for divorce on the grounds of cruelty and habitual intoxication the defendant may recriminate the adultery of the plaintiff. Johns v. Johns, 29 Ga. 718. When the defendant recriminates on the ground of the plaintiff's adultery, does such recrimination absolutely disqualify the plaintiff from testifying?

[1, 2] At common law a party to a suit was incompetent to testify as witness on the ground of interest. Our evidence act declares every person offered as witness shall be competent to testify, except in specified instances, provided that nothing therein contained shall apply to any action, suit, or proceeding in any court in consequence of adultery. Civil Code 1910, §§ 5858-5861. If the plaintiff's action had been based on the ground of adultery, she would have been an incompetent witness. Cook v. Cook, 46 Ga. 308. The defendant would likewise be disqualified as a witness. Such a case would come within the statute. But where a wife sues for divorce on the ground of cruel treatment and habitual intoxication, her action is not a proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husband's recrimination does not make it such. It, therefore, follows that the wife is a competent witness in her own behalf to prove the husband's cruelty and habitual intoxication. But neither spouse is competent as a witness to prove or deny the recrimination of adultery; for that is in the nature of a cross-action instituted in consequence of adultery. This principle was recognized in Woolfolk v. Woolfolk, 53 Ga. 661. In that case a wife sued her husband on the ground of habitual intoxication, cruelty, and adultery. The wife testified to facts tending to support her petition; and this court said that "the evidence of the plaintiff, so far as that evidence went to prove adultery on the part of the defendant, was incompetent and illegal." The implication is that she was a competent witness as to the other grounds of her suit.

We think the court erred in rejecting the plaintiff's testimony tending to support her grounds of cruel treatment and habitual intoxication, but properly excluded so much of her testimony as related to the ground of adultery alleged in the defendant's recrimination.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 306*)—TAXATION (§§ 545, 569*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—EXECUTION AGAINST TAX COLLECTOR.

The provisions of the Civil Code 1910, § 1187, relating to the power of the Comptroller General to issue execution against tax collectors and the sureties on their bonds where there is a failure to settle their accounts in terms of the law, is violative of the "due process" clause of the Constitution (Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 3; Civ. Code 1910, § 6359).

ATKINSON, J. On the 11th day of November, 1911, the Comptroller General issued an execution, in favor of the state of Georgia, against the tax collector of Brooks county and the sureties on his bond for an amount due for taxes collected, for which no settlement had been made. One of the sureties filed a suit to enjoin enforcement of the execution. The judge refused to grant an ad interim injunction, and the plaintiff excepted. One ground relied on for injunction was the invalidity of the execution. It was charged that the execution was void because the statute in pursuance of which the Comptroller General issued the execution was violative of the due process clause of the Constitution. Under the view we take of the case it is unnecessary to deal with any other question. The statute to which reference is made is to be found in the Civil Code, § 1187, which declares: "If any collector shall fail to settle his accounts with the Comptroller General in terms of the law, he shall issue execution against him and his sureties for the principal amount, with interest at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum on said amount: Provided, that if upon a final settlement it should appear that said collector was entitled to credits at the time he is required by law to settle, the Comptroller General may allow the same, and charge such interest only on the amount for which the collector is in default, together with all the costs and attorney's fees incurred by reason of the issuance of said execution."

There is no provision of law for notice to a delinquent tax collector or surety on his bond, or hearing, before the Comptroller General issues an execution. When such an execution is issued, it is final process and authorizes a levy and sale of the property of the defendant, and no provision is made by which the execution can be converted into mesne process by making an affidavit of illegality or otherwise. That an illegality would not lie to such an execution was expressly ruled in the case of Webb v. Newsom, 138 Ga. 342, 75 S. E. 106. There is no other provision for tax collectors or the sureties on their bonds to have a hearing before the property is finally sold.

Where an execution issues, and there is no provision of law for the defendant to have a hearing before he is finally deprived of his property, he is not afforded due process of law, and the enforcement of the execution will be enjoined. Shippen Bros. Lumber Co. v. Elliott, 134 Ga. 699, 68 S. E. 509; Cent. Ga. R. R. v. Wright, 207 U. S. 127, 28 Sup.

Ct. 47, 52 L. Ed. 134, 12 Ann. Cas. 463. After the rendition of the decision in the case last cited, the Legislature of this state passed an act, Acts 1910, page 22, by the fourth section of which it was declared: "Should the taxpayer desire to contest the taxability of said property under this section, he may do so by petition in equity in the superior court of the county where said property is assessed." This was intended to afford taxpayers an opportunity to be heard on the question of the taxability of their property, where it was attempted to enforce an execution issued by the Comptroller General for taxes, and was evidently enacted to meet the defect in the law pointed out in the decision last mentioned. The scope of the act, however, was not sufficiently broad to comprehend tax collectors and sureties on their bonds so as to afford them a hearing where the Comptroller General has issued his order against them for the failure of the tax collector to make returns and pay over money collected from the taxpayers. There is no provision of law for a hearing for the tax collectors and their sureties in such case, and it was erroneous for the judge to refuse to grant the injunction.

EVIDENCE (§§ 165, 423*)—BEST AND SECONDARY—ADMISSIBILITY.

The court erred in permitting the plaintiff to testify that he signed a note at the Bank of Quitman, for the amount for which the attachment was issued, as security for the defendant; this evidence having been admitted over the objection upon the ground that the note was the best evidence to show the amount for which it was given and who signed it. 5. TRIAL (§ 83*)—WITNESSES (§ 367*)—INTEREST—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where an attorney at law had testified in favor of the defendant, it was not irrelevant to show by the same witness that he represented other creditors of the defendant, who would gain an advantage in case the traverse was sustained. Objection to the testimony on the ground that it was incompetent is too general, where it does not state for what reasons it was incompetent.

SMITH v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 12, 1913.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The fact that the presiding judge, in addition to charging the jury that the defendant must be proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, added the rule, applicable to cases of circumstantial evidence, that the guilt of the defendant must be proved to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis, was not injurious to the defendant, on the assignment of error that there was no legal evidence to authorize such charge. If the case was one involving the rule as to circumstantial evidence, the charge was right. If not, it was not injurious to the accused, as it gave a rule more favorable than he could claim.

2. HOMICIDE (§ 11*)—"LEGAL MALICE."

There was no error in charging as follows: "Legal malice" is an intent unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature in a case where the law would neither justify, nor to any degree excuse, the intention, should the killing take place as intended. Legal malice is not necessarily ill will or hatred. It is an unlawful intention to kill, without justification or mitigation, which must exist at the time of the killing; but it is not necessary for that intention to exist for any length of time before the killing. A man may form the intention to kill, do the killing instantly, and regret the deed as soon as done."

8. HOMICIDE (§§ 167, 338*)—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The court should have excluded, on objection, certain testimony that a witness owned a gun, which was stolen from his house about the time when the homicide occurred, and that after the homicide he identified it in the possession of another witness, to whom it had been delivered by a third person; there being no legal evidence to show that the gun so stolen was that which was used by the accused in the commission of the homicide, or was in his possession, or was connected with the crime in any way. But, under the uncontradicted evidence, this error will not require a reversal.

USURY (§ 98*)—INVALID CONVEYANCE—HOMESTEAD.

A conveyance of land executed by a borrower to secure a debt infected with usury is void and ineffectual to pass title. Civ. Code 1910, § 3442. Therefore the maker of such a conveyance may, subsequently to its execution, have a valid homestead set apart in the property sought to be so conveyed, which homestead will not be subject to a judgment recovered on the debt notwithstanding the usury was eliminated when the judgment was taken. Applying these rulings to the evidence in this case, the court erred in directing a verdict finding the property subject.

RELIFORD v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 11, 1913.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 641*)—CONTINUANCE—DISCRETION—"BENEFIT OF COUNSEL."

Counsel, appointed by the court to represent the accused on trial for his life, were allowed only ten minutes to confer before entering upon the trial and after such conference announced to the court that they "had not had the proper time to prepare the defense," and for this reason they moved for a continuance to a subsequent adjourned term, which motion was overruled. The trial proceeded and terminated in a verdict of guilty, and the accused was sentenced to be hung. Held, that it was not a sound exercise of the discretion of the court to deny the continuance without at least offering in lieu of it to postpone the trial for a reasonable time to afford counsel opportunity to prepare the defense.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. WORDS AND PHRASES—"BENEFIT OF COUNSEL."

The guaranty of "benefit of counsel" to accused, given in the Bill of Rights of Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 5 (Civ. Code 1910, § 6361), means more than the mere appointment by the court of counsel to represent the accused and implies also that such counsel be given a reasonable time for preparation to properly represent the accused at the trial.

FISH, C. J. On Tuesday, February 18, 1913, during the regular February term of the superior court of Liberty county, an indictment was found against Dorsey Reliford, charging him with the offense of murder, alleged to have been committed on October 30, 1912. The case was called for trial on Friday, February 21, 1913, at that term of the court. Upon the call of the case for trial Mr. Darsey, an attorney, stated to the court: That on the next preceding Friday "he was spoken to by defendant and agreed to represent him, provided the defendant would employ James R. Thomas to assist him; that he [Darsey] had been recently admitted to the bar; that, this being his first appearance as an attorney, he did not feel authorized to take a case of that importance alone; that the defendant had failed to employ Mr. Thomas, not being able to arrange his fee; and that Mr. Thomas had returned to his home in another county." The court then appointed attorneys B. A. Way, S. B. Brewton, and H. H. Elders to assist Mr. Darsey and gave them ten minutes in which to confer. After the consultation Mr. Way asked the court to continue the case until the May adjourned term upon the ground "that [such counsel] had not had proper time to prepare the defense in a case where the person's life was at stake." The solicitor general stated to the court "that the defendant had been in jail about 3½ months before the court convened, and that it was not a bonded case and ought to be disposed of." The motion for a continuance was overruled. The trial was immediately entered upon, and a verdict of guilty was returned. One of the grounds of the motion made for new trial by the accused was that the court erred in refusing to continue the case upon the showing above set forth. A new trial was refused, and the accused excepted.

It is declared in our Bill of Rights (Civil Code 1910, § 6361) that, "every person charged with an offense against the laws of this state shall have the privilege and benefit of counsel." This constitutional guaranty of "benefit of counsel" means something more than the mere appointment by the court of counsel to represent the accused. He is entitled to a reasonable time for preparation by such counsel to properly represent him on the trial. As was stated in Blackman v. State, 76 Ga. 288: "This constitutional privilege would amount to nothing if the counsel for the accused are not allowed sufficient time to prepare his defense." To the same effect see Jones v. State, 65 Ga. 506; Jackson v. State, 88 Ga. 784, 15 S. E. 677; McArver v. State, 114 Ga. 514, 40 S. E. 779; Nick v. State, 128 Ga. 573, 58 S. E. 48; Harris v. State, 119 Ga. 114, 45 S. E. 973. As was said in the case last cited: "Undue haste in the administration of the criminal law is as much to be condemned as unnecessary delay. The true course lies between these two extremes. The law vests the determination of questions relating to the time of trial in the discretion of the trial judges; and this court will not interfere with their rulings on the subject, unless it is manifest that there has been an abuse of discretion." In the case at bar the accused had endeavored to employ counsel on Friday before the court convened on the following Monday but, on account of inability to arrange fees, had not succeeded. The indictment was found on Tuesday; the case was called for trial on the following Friday. The accused had no counsel, as Mr.

Darsey was unwilling to represent him without the aid of more experienced counsel. The court appointed three other attorneys to assist Mr. Darsey in representing the accused, announcing that he would give them ten minutes in which to confer. After consultation within this brief period allowed by the court, counsel announced that they had not been able to prepare the defense within the time allowed and asked for a continuance until an adjourned term. We know of no case where so short a time for preparation of the trial of a case of any description was allowed by the court; and, without considering the merits of this case, we have no hesitancy in ruling that it was not a sound exercise of the discretion of the court to deny the continuance without, in lieu of it, at least offering to postpone the trial for a reasonable time to afford opportunity to counsel for preparation for the trial. We are constrained, therefore, to reverse the judgment on the ground that the court erred in refusing a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

BERRIEN COUNTY v. ALLEN. (No. 5,050.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 25, 1913.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

The petition stated a cause of action, and the court did not err in overruling the demurrer.

2. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

There was sufficient evidence to authorize the verdict.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 200*)—NEW TRIAL (§ 39*) — PERSONAL INJURIES TO WIFE — RIGHT OF ACTION — ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

The court erred in giving the following charge, complained of in the motion for a new trial: "If you believe, from the evidence that she is entitled to recover, the elements that you would be authorized to consider in determining the amount of damages would be how far, if any, her capacity to discharge her ordinary daily duties has been diminished, and, if so diminished, allow compensation for that diminution." This instruction was erroneous, because the evidence shows that the plaintiff was a married woman, and her husband would be entitled, if any one, to recover for the loss of the wife's services. Wrightsville & Tennille R. Co. v. Vaughan, 9 Ga. App. 371, 71 S. E. 691; Roberts v. Haines, 112 Ga. 842, 38 S. E. 109; Georgia R. Co. v. Tice, 124 Ga. 460, 52 S. E. 916, 4 Ann. Cns. 200. The wife and the husband both could not recover for the diminished capacity to discharge her duties. It being impossible to determine what damages, if any, the jury allowed for diminution of the plaintiff's capacity to discharge such duties, the case must be sent back for a new trial.

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The liability of the defendants depended wholly upon the stipulation in an application for a loan, in which the applicants agreed to pay the plaintiff a compensation for the examination of the property offered to secure the loan. By the terms of the contract the ultimate right of determining whether the security offered was satisfactory was reserved to the plaintiff. The ruling of this court upon the demurrers when this case was previously here (11 Ga. App. 177, 74 S. E. 1034) practically disposed of all the contentions of the defendants, save the single defense that the inspection made by the plaintiff was colorable only, and not made in good faith, and that the application was arbitrarily rejected, for the sole purpose of creating a liability against the defendants for the sum which they had agreed to pay. Upon the trial now under review there was no evidence which indicated that the inspection made by the plaintiff was not made in good faith, or that the application was rejected otherwise than in the exercise of the plaintiff's right to be satisfied with the security offered; there is no evidence which compels the conclusion that the contract was entered into by the plaintiff for the sole purpose of creating a liability upon the part of the defendants; and consequently a verdict in favor of the plaintiff was demanded, and the assignments of error upon the charge of the court are immaterial.

1. SALES (§ 161*)—DELIVERY TO CARRIER—NECESSITY OF BILL OF LADING.

The execution of a bill of lading is not an indispensable prerequisite to a valid contract of affreightment, nor necessary to evidence such a delivery to a common carrier as will be the equivalent in the contemplation of law to delivery to the consignee. Especially is this true when delivery is made by a shipper at a point upon the line of a carrier where there is no agency or shipping agent of the carrier.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1005*)—VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

There is evidence which authorized the inference that the defendant had constituted the carrier its agent to receive and deliver the wood which was in controversy, and other evidence which authorized the conclusion that the plaintiff had corrected all errors in the delivery of the wood which had been brought to his attention by the defendant. Consequently the evidence authorized the verdict, and the discretion of the trial judge in refusing a new trial will not be disturbed.

Error from City Court of Reidsville; A. S. Way, Judge pro hac.

Action by the Bank of Cobbtown against Dassey Vaughan, and garnishment summons was served upon J. N. Collins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

H. H. Elders, of Reidsville, for plaintiff in error. H. C. Beasley, of Reidsville, for defendant in error.

ROAN, J. The Bank of Cobbtown sued W. B. Vaughan in the city court, and had summons of garnishment served upon J. N. Collins. The garnishee answered that he had $50 in his hands belonging to the defendant. Dassey Vaughan traversed this answer, and denied that this $50 belonged to W. B. Vaughan, and claimed it as her property. The claim and traverse came on for trial, and counsel for the plaintiff moved the court to dismiss the traverse, on the ground that no written notice of it had been given to the garnishee as required by law. The claimant replied by showing that at the March term, 1913, of the court—the first term at which the garnishee could have answered—the claimant traversed the answer, “and the written traverse was read to and shown to the party that made said answer, and to the counsel for the plaintiff, and that both of them read said traverse, and fully understood the same, and that said case was continued by consent of all parties at the March term, 1913.” The court granted the motion to dismiss the said traverse on the ground urged, and the claimant excepted.

We hold that there was no error in the judgment excepted to. Section 5287 of the Civil Code of 1910 reads thus: “The service of notice of traverse shall be perfected by the plaintiff, his agent, or attorney of record, or by the proper officer of said court, either by serving the garnishee, his agent, or attorney of record in person or by leaving a copy of such notice of traverse at the most notorious place of abode of such garnishee, his agent, or attorney, or by acknowledgment of service.” And service of notice not having been perfected, as required by this section of the Code, there was no service in contemplation of law.

The defendant who filed the plea was present at the rendition of the judgment against his joint obligor, but no further proceedings were had at that term of the court. At the succeeding term he orally moved to dismiss the petition as to himself, and this motion was granted. The court did not err in sustaining the motion. The subject of the suit was a joint contract, and the rendition of the judgment against one of the joint obligors merged the entire cause of action, and bars any subsequent suit on the same contract against the other debtor.

In the trial of an action against a street railway company for damages for the homicide of the plaintiff's husband, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant's motorman in running a car at excessive speed, it was error, requiring the grant of a new trial, to admit evidence tending to show that other motormen, in charge of other cars of the defendant, had operated those cars at the place where the plaintiff's husband was killed at an excessive rate of speed, and on a former occasion came very near running over some children at that place.

[Ed. Nota.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 229-238; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

Error from City Court, Floyd County; J. H. Reece, Judge.

Action by Mrs. W. S. Lansdell against the Rome Railway & Light Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

J. M. Hunt and Dean & Dean, all of Rome, for plaintiff in error. Seaborn & Barry Wright and Graham Wright, all of Rome, for defendant in error.

ROAN, J. Mrs. W. S. Lansdell sued the Rome Railway & Light Company for damages for the killing of her husband, who was killed by being struck by one of defendant company's cars while crossing the track of the company at a public crossing in the city of Rome. The petition alleged that he was in the exercise of all ordinary and reasonable care and caution, and that his death resulted through the negligence of the defendant's motorman in running the car recklessly and at excessive speed, and at a rate of speed greater than that allowed by ordinances of the city of Rome. The defendant, in its answer, denied all the material allegations of the plaintiff, and in addition thereto pleaded that the ordinances of the city of Rome, alleged to have been violated in the running of the defendant's cars at the time of the homicide, were unreasonable and invalid, in so far as they applied to the running of its cars at the place of the homicide. The trial of the case resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

The defendant excepts to the overruling of its motion for a new trial. The motion was based on the usual general grounds, and on several additional grounds, one of which was as follows: "Because the following evidence of witness A. P. McGinnis was illegally admitted by the court over the objection of movant, to wit: Q. What was the usual way the cars ran at that place? A. Sometimes they ran pretty slow, and sometimes pretty fast. Q. Did you ever make any protest to Mr. Arnold, the superintendent of the car line here, as to the rapidity with which that car was run along there? A. Yes, sir. Q. Was that before Mr. Lansdell was killed? A. About six weeks before he was killed. Q. What did you say to him? A. The reason I said anything to him was they came near getting some children there one day, came in a hair's breadth of it, coming from the store south.

Q. The same direction they were running that night? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did you say to him? A. I told him I saw a narrow escape with some children, that they were running too fast, and he says, 'Make a case against the motorman and conductor,' and I says, 'I will not do it; it is your business to instruct your men.' Q. What did he say to you then? A. He never said anything; he treated me with indifference, and walked off." Defendant objected to the admission of this testimony, on the grounds that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and that there were no pleadings to authorize it.

Unless this evidence could illustrate the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the city ordinance in question, it was clearly inadmissible. It is impossible in looking through this record for us to arrive at the conclusion that this evidence could have been of any material value to the jury in reaching a conclusion on the issues involved. It will be noted that the answer to the first question was that "sometimes they ran pretty slow, and sometimes pretty fast." Whether he made any protest to Mr. Arnold, the superintendent of the car company, as to the rapidity with which cars were run along there, throws no light on the question as to whether the company should or should not have run rapidly. As to coming in a hair's breadth of running down some children there one day, running in the same direction they were running that night, this furnishes no light on the question. The only possible effect that this evidence could have produced on the minds of the jury was a prejudicial one against the defendant company, as it was calculated to create the impression that the agents of the defendant were habitually reckless and careless in the operation of the cars, without regard to human safety. Therefore the admission of this evidence to the jury was more than likely harmful to the defendant. As justifying the court in admitting this evidence, we are cited by the defendant in error to the case of Savannah, Florida & Western R. Co. v. Flannagan, 82 Ga. 579, 9 S. E. 471, 14 Am. St. Rep. 188. An examination of that case will show that Judge Bleckley, in rendering the opinion of the Supreme Court, expressed doubt as to the admissibility of the evidence there objected to. This evidence showed the high speed with which the same engine was habitually run by the same engineer at the same place. Judge Bleckley said: "This evidence was of doubtful admissibility. The authorities on the question are in conflict, and upon so doubtful a question we think the court did not err in admitting the evidence." But in the case at bar the evidence objected to fails to show that it was the same motorman or the same car and the same place, or that the company habitually ran its cars in a certain way. The testimony is by no means so strong or pertinent as that excepted to in the Flannagan Case. So upon the whole we conclude there was harmful error in admitting it. See, also, Atlantic & West Point R. Co. v. Newton, 85 Ga. 517, 11 S. E. 776, and Central R. Co. v. Kent, 87 Ga. 402, 408, 13 S. E. 502. There being evidence in this case which would have justified the verdict, the relative diligence and care of plaintiff's husband and the defendant company being a question for the jury, we would let it stand, but for the error in admitting this testimony, which may have played an important part in affecting the decision of the jury. See Town of Pelham v. Pelham Telephone Co., 131 Ga. 325, 62 S. E. 186; Ga. R. & Banking Co. v. Walker, 87 Ga. 204, 13 S. E. 511; Southern Ry. Co. v. O'Bryan, 112 Ga. 127, 37 S. E. 161; Pullman Co. v. Schaffner, 126 Ga. 609, 55 S. E. 933, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407.

Other than as above indicated, there was no material error in the trial.

VAGRANCY (§ 1*)—EVIDENCE.

A married woman, whose husband is not shown to be able to support her, cannot be convicted of vagrancy upon proof alone that she is able to work and does not work; and this is true, though she and her husband may be living in a state of separation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vagrancy, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

Error from City Court of Camilla; R. D. Bush, Judge.

Ethel Brown was convicted of vagrancy, and brings error. Reversed.

E. E. Cox, R. L. Cox, and J. M. Mayo, Jr., all of Camilla, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Haggard, Sol., of Camilla, for the State.

POTTLE, J. It is unfortunately true that some husbands do not comply with the legal and highly moral obligation imposed upon them to support their wives. It is punishment enough for a woman to espouse a man unwilling to support her. If he can and won't, the law will compel him, and will excuse the woman for not doing that which the husband is bound to perform for her. Certainly she is not to be classed as a vagrant merely because she relies upon compliance by her husband with the obligation imposed upon him by law. Married women are often compelled to supplement the income which the ostensible head of the family can earn; but they do this from stern necessity, and not because the law compels them to do it. Sometimes married women support worthless or helpless husbands; but to hold that they were legally bound to do so would put an unwarrantable burden upon the holy estate of matrimony and make undesirable for the woman a relation into which the law encourages her to enter. In the present state of the law the burden of supporting the family falls upon the husband, in return for which the law crowns him with the proud, but sometimes meaningless, title of "head of the family." If he would wear the crown, he must bear the burden. Some day all this may be changed; but we are dealing with present-day law, and "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

The undisputed evidence shows that the accused was a married woman, and that she lived with her husband about half the time. The evidence is silent in reference to the husband's ability to work, or as to whether he actually contributed to his wife's support. At any rate, this is not the proper proceeding in which to determine the respective obligations of husband and wife, or to fix the blame for the separation. It is enough that the woman is married and the husband is in duty bound to support her. He represents the "visible means of support" to which the statute refers.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 535*)—EVIDENCE—CONFESSION—SUFFICIENCY.

In order to authorize a conviction of arson, the corpus delicti must be established, independently of the confession of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1225, 1226; Dec. Dig. § 535.*]

2. ARSON (§ 37*)—EVIDENCE—CORPUS DELICTI.

ROAN, J. The accused was convicted of arson, and excepts to the overruling of his motion for a new trial.

[1] The principal ground insisted on is that there was no proof of the corpus delicti. In a case of this kind it takes more than proof of the burning to constitute a crime; it must appear from evidence, either direct or circumstantial, to a reasonable and moral certainty, that the house was burned by some criminal agency. West v. State, 6 Ga.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key-No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

App. 105, 64 S. E. 130. There was proof in this case of a confession, but it is well settled that the corpus delicti must be proved alhude the confession.

[2] The presumption in a case of arson is that the burning was the result of accident or providential cause, rather than by criminal design. In this particular case the same defendant was convicted in the same court once before for the same offense, made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and it was brought to this court for review. The court then held that "the circumstances relied on in this case are entirely too inconclusive. There is no evidence sufficient to overcome the presumption that the burning was accidental. This being so, the evidence was not sufficient to authorize the conviction." Now, it appears, upon a comparison of the former record with the present one, that the evidence is practically the same in both cases, and not any stronger in this case than in the previous one. It not being sufficient then to authorize a verdict of guilty, it is for the same reasons insufficient now. See Simms v. State, 12 Ga. App. 551, 77 S. E. 891; Moon v. State, 12 Ga. App. 614, 77 S. E. 1088.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 786*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF STATEMENT OF ACCUSED.

The following charge to the jury was not erroneous as tending to deny their right to believe a part of the prisoner's statement and reject the remainder: "The prisoner's statement is made under oath, and it shall have such weight and effect as the jury sees fit to give it. The jury may believe it in preference to the sworn testimony in the case."

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FACTS AND EVIDENCE.

The following excerpt from the charge of the court is complained of: "Is there any other reasonable hypothesis or explanation of the existence of all the facts that is consistent with the innocence of the accused? Can all these things be true and yet can we reasonably say he is innocent?" Error was assigned upon the ground that if some of the circumstances relied on by the state were untrue, there might have been an acquittal. This excerpt was not erroneous for the reason assigned.

NEW TRIAL (§ 68*)—JUDGMENT NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

The description in the mortgage fi. fa. did not follow the mortgage, nor did the levy follow the fi. fa. It appears, from the evidence, that the mortgagor had two farms in the Atlanta district in which the mortgaged crops were located. There was no parol evidence locating the property described in the mortgage as the "Clark place," nor any testimony identifying the property described in the levy with the property which had been mortgaged. A writing containing a promise to labor which does not describe the work to be performed, is too indefinite to be the basis of a prosecution for cheating and swindling, under section 715 of the Penal Code. Adams v. State, 10 Ga. App. 801, 74 S. E. 95, and citations.

Error from City Court of Baxley; A. V. Sellers, Judge.

Action by Beverly Ambrose against K. M. Barber. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bennett, of Baxley, for plaintiff in error. Parker & Highsmith, of Baxley, for defendant in error.

POTTLE, J. The only question in this case is whether service of process had been made upon the defendant, so as to authorize the rendition of a judgment against her in the absence of an appearance and pleading. The officer made a return of personal service. The affidavit of illegality traversed the return at the first term after the defendant was apprised of its existence, and denied that she was ever served.

[1] It is settled law that where there is a return of personal service, a traverse thereof will be sustained upon proof of no personal service, even though another lawful mode of service may be shown. Wood v. Callaway, 119 Ga. 301, 47 S. E. 178.

[2] The defendant, who was a married woman, living with her husband, testified that she was never served, and the correctness of the court's judgment in directing a verdict in favor of the traverse depends upon the testimony of the officer who made the return of service. From his testimony it appears that the husband and the wife were served jointly. The officer went with copies of the suit and process to the defendant's house, and stopped outside the front yard, at the gate, and did not get out of his buggy. The husband was in the yard, and the defendant was scrubbing the porch, which was within three or four feet of the gate. The husband was between the officer and the defendant, and within hearing distance. The officer told the husband he had papers to serve on him and his wife, and handed two copies to the husband. The defendant was not more than ten feet away, and there was no reason why she could not hear the officer's remark to her husband. The officer never spoke to the defendant, nor did she speak. We think the court properly construed the testimony. The defendant says that she did not hear the conversation between the officer and her husband. She may have been engrossed with her work and failed to hear. The testimony of the officer is that she could have heard; hers that she did not. Besides, the husband had no right to accept service for his wife. Counsel calls our attention to the Biblical dogma that "They twain shall be one flesh," and argues that in the eyes of the law persons living together in wedlock should at least be enough one for the husband to represent the wife in such a matter as this in her very presence. We might take this view of it if the wife had heard the officer tell her husband that one of the papers was for her. In that case a jury might give some force to the natural curiosity which might be ascribed to the defendant to see what was in the papers. But the husband says that he got only one copy, and the wife claims that she heard no part of the conversation, and never knew that she was sued until she saw her property advertised in the paper for sale. The evidence does not show personal service, and, under the decision above cited, proof of no other service could avail the plaintiff in execution.

Judgment affirmed.

§ 32 (N.C.) Forms of action are no longer of supreme importance, and the objection that an ordinary action for damages for injury to shade trees in the street in front of plaintiff's property should not have been brought, but that an action for compensation for taking property by eminent domain, should have been brought instead, is of no weight.—*Moore v. ### I. NATURE AND REQUISITES.

(A) Acquisition of Rights by Prescription in General.

§ 10 (N.C.) A city may acquire title to land by adverse possession.—City of Raleigh v. Dufrey, 79 S. E. 434.

§ 13 (N.C.) In order to prove title by adverse possession under Revisal 1905, § 380, subsec. 2, plaintiff in an action, must show open, notorious, continuous, and unequivocal adverse occupation, within visible boundaries and under claim of ownership, of the land in dispute and covered by his deeds, for 21 years prior to the alleged trespass of defendant.—Barfield v. Hill, 79 S. E. 677.

§ 60 (N.C.) Where receiver appointed by divorce decree to apply rents to payment of alimony permitted the wife to take possession in discharge of her claim for alimony, her possession held not adverse to the husband.—Goble v. Orrell, 79 S. E. 957.

§ 79 (Ga.) A sheriff's deed, executed to one who purchases at a tax sale, though not accompanied by the tax fi. fa. under which the land was sold, is good as color of title.—Peeples v. Wilson, 79 S. E. 466.

§ 85 (N.C.) In an action to try the title to land where plaintiff relied on adverse possession, it was error to exclude evidence offered by defendant that a certain line was surveyed and that plaintiff and his predecessors never claimed beyond it, though plaintiff's deed covered the whole tract.—Barfield v. Hill, 79 S. E. 677.

II. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

§ 104 (Va.) Where the origin of a possession is not accounted for, and would be unlawful unless there had been a grant, length of possession is prima facie evidence from which the jury may presume a conveyance.—McCauley v. Grim, 79 S. E. 1041.

III. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 112 (N.C.) Plaintiff, in an action to try the title to land, who relies on adverse possession under color of title, has the burden of proof.—Barfield v. Hill, 79 S. E. 677.

§ 115 (Ga.) Where, in an action for land, the evidence would have sustained a finding that plaintiff and those under whom he claimed had actual and adverse possession of the land for more than 20 years prior to the date when defendant entered into possession, it was error to grant a nonsuit.—Henry v. Roberts, 79 S. E. 115.

§ 115 (N.C.) In an action to try the title to land, where the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to prove adverse possession for more than 21 years under color of title, a motion to nonsuit was properly denied.—Barfield v. Hill, 79 S. E. 677.

Evidence in an action to try the title to land, wherein plaintiff claimed title by adverse possession, held to be so far conflicting on the question of continuous and unequivocal possession for the period required that the case should have been submitted to the jury.—Id.

AGRICULTURE.

§ 4 (N.C.) A county agricultural association which gives a fair cannot exonerate itself from liability for damages to one injured by its negligence, on the theory that it is a public service company.—Smith v. Cumberland County Agr. Society, 79 S. E. 632.

A fair association is bound to know that the remises are safe for public use, and to furnish adequate appliances for the prevention of injuries which might be anticipated from the nature of the performance, but it is not an insurer of patrons, though it must warn the public against dangers which can readily be foreseen.—Id.

In an action by a spectator at a fair, who was carried up by a hot-air balloon, a rope attaching around his foot, evidence of the negligence of the fair association held sufficient to go to the jury.—Id.

§ 7 (Ga.App.) A note for the price of fertilizer, executed after Act Dec. 18, 1901 (Civ. Code 1910, § 1771 et seq.), went into effect, is not void merely because the tax tags required by law were not attached to the packages.—Wilmington Oil & Guano Co. v. Swann, 79 S. E. 76.

Under Act Aug. 22, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 172), where the actual value of fertilizer sold falls more than 3 per cent. below the guaranteed commercial value, the seller can recover only the actual value, and is liable in damages for 25 per cent. of the price.—Id.

The branding of the words "High Grade" on packages of inferior fertilizer does not render a note for the price absolutely void; but the buyer's remedy in such case is to recover the damages prescribed in Act Aug. 22, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 172), and to reduce the amount of the seller's recovery to the actual value of the fertilizer, if it falls more than 3 per cent. below the guaranteed commercial value.—Id.

Where the seller of fertilizer expressly defines, in the purchase-money note, to warrant as quality, and states merely that the laws of the state have been complied with, the buyer cannot, because of inferior fertilizer, recover any damages other than those provided by Act Aug. 27, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 172).—Id.

Where, in an action for the price of fertilizer, the defense was that the fertilizer was not of the guaranteed commercial value, a certificate of the official analysis was admissible in evidence, though it did not appear that the analysis was made from a sample taken from the particular lot of fertilizer for the purchase price of which recovery was sought.—Id.

§ 7 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action on a note given for fertilizer, the defense, relying on Civ. Code 1910, § 1774, alleged a deficiency in the fertilizer as marked and guaranteed, the burden as on defendant to prove a deficiency of 3 per cent. below the total commercial value, by comparison with the official analysis of the state chemist.—Keaton v. Birmingham Fertilizer Co., 79 S. E. 754.

Georgia Fertilizer & Oil Co.*, 79 S. E. 236.

§ 22 (Va.) Where a deed granting land to a person for life with remainder to her children was altered after its execution and before its recording by striking out the grant of the remainder, a court of equity could grant relief to the remaindermen.—Dickenson v. Ramsey, 79 S. E. 1025.

§ 29 (Va.) Clear, cogent, and convincing evidence held necessary in support of allegation that deed to complainants' mother for life, with remainder to them, was altered after its execution and before its recording.—Dickenson v. Ramsey, 79 S. E. 1025.

Evidence held insufficient to show that deed, the record of which purported to convey a fee-simple title to the grantee as originally executed, conveyed only a life estate, with remainder to the grantee's children.—Id.

I. NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY.

§ 11 (Ga.) The losing party to a judgment on general demurrer may either sue out a direct bill of exceptions assigning error on the judgment or have exceptions pendente lite certified and filed.—Durrence v. Waters, 79 S. E. 841.

§ 13 (Ga.) A plaintiff cannot, while his motion for new trial is pending, bring to the Supreme Court for review any ruling by the judge during the trial or the judgment on the verdict.—Durrence v. Waters, 79 S. E. 841.

III. DECISIONS REVIEWABLE.

(D) Finality of Determination.

§ 69 (W.Va.) A decree in partition, establishing a lost deed and settling a disputed title, is appealable.—Wright v. Pittman, 79 S. E. 1091.

§ 70 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 6138, where the losing party on a judgment on general demurrer files exceptions pendente lite, the ruling on demurrer becomes a pendente lite ruling, reviewable only after determination of the case on exceptions taken to the final judgment.—Durrence v. Waters, 79 S. E. 841.

§ 78 (Ga.App.) Where a petition is demurred to both generally and specially, and only part of the grounds of special demurrer are sustained, and the general demurrer is overruled and the petition left to be tried upon the allegations not stricken, a writ of error sued out to the ruling sustaining the special demurrer will be dismissed as premature; such ruling not being a final judgment within Civ. Code 1910, § 6138, prescribing the cases wherein a writ of error will lie.—Harrell v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 240.

§ 79 (N.C.) A direct appeal from the dismissal of a codefendant, from whom appellant claimed relief, is premature, and must be dismissed.—Spruill v. Bank of Plymouth, 79 S. E. 262.

§ 80 (Va.) A final order, within Code 1904, § 3454, authorizing writs of error to review such orders, defined as one disposing of the case, leaving nothing to be done save the execution of the order.—Salem Loan & Trust Co. v. Kelsey, 79 S. E. 329.

(E) Nature, Scope, and Effect of Decision.

§ 93 (Ga.App.) Where the only questions presented for review arise upon certain rulings, and it appears that neither a reversal of any of such rulings nor a setting aside of the verdict will terminate the main case, the writ of error will be dismissed as premature.—Hall v. C. J. Roehr & Co., 79 S. E. 379.

§ 110 (S.C.) While an order granting or refusing a new trial is appealable under Code Civ. Proc. 1912, § 11 (d), subd. 2, the right is limited to orders which the court has jurisdiction to review.—Miller v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 645.

§ 110 (Va.) In proceeding on three notes, an order setting aside a verdict for defendant as to two of them, and denying the motion to set aside the verdict as to the third, held not a final order, and not reviewable on error.—Salem Loan & Trust Co. v. Kelsey, 79 S. E. 329.

§ 117 (Ga.App.) The refusal of a trial judge to approve a certain portion of the brief of evidence is not reviewable on direct exception.—Chandler v. Baggett, 79 S. E. 179.

IV. RIGHT OF REVIEW.

(A) Persons Entitled.

§ 150 (Va.) One decreed secondarily liable only for the deficiency remaining after a sale of land to satisfy a vendor's lien held not entitled to appeal, under Code 1904, § 3454, giving a right of appeal from an interlocutory decree adjudicating the principles of a cause.—C. L. Ritter Lumber Co. v. Coal Mountain Mining Co., 79 S. E. 322.

Under Code 1904, § 3455, a grantee of the timber on certain land, decreed only secondarily liable for a deficiency occurring on a sale of the land to satisfy a vendor's lien, could not appeal prior to such sale and a showing that a deficiency in excess of $300 existed.—Id.

V. PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION IN LOWER COURT OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

(A) Issues and Questions in Lower Court.

§ 170 (Ga.) Objections based upon the unconstitutionality of a statute will not be reviewed, unless urged upon the trial and passed upon by the court below.—Georgia & F. Ry. v. Newton, 79 S. E. 142.

§ 170 (Ga.) Questions as to the constitutionality of Civ. Code 1910, §§ 445, 447, 448, relative to the validation of bonds issued by a municipality, could not be considered on error, when not presented below at the hearing on the petition for injunction.—Edwards v. Town of Guyton, 79 S. E. 195.

§ 170 (Ga.App.) The constitutionality of a statute will not be reviewed, where the question was not raised below.—Richter v. Cathy, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 179 (Ga.) In an action for injuries from a crossing accident, a request for an instruction that the blow-post law (Civ. Code 1910, § 2675), was unconstitutional, where no reason was presented showing wherein it was unconstitutional, or what provision of the Constitution was violated, was not a sufficient presentation of the question.—Georgia & F. Ry. v. Newton, 79 S. E. 142.

(B) Objections and Motions, and Rulings Thereon.

§ 205 (Ga.App.) The correctness of a judgment excluding plaintiff's evidence could not be reviewed, where no objection was filed to such judgment, though objection was made to a judgment awarding a nonsuit.—Little Rock Furniture Co. v. Jones & Co., 79 S. E. 375.

§ 206 (N.C.) In the absence of an appropriate request as required by rule 27 (140 N. C. 642, 66 S. E. viii), an appellant cannot complain that evidence admissible solely in corroboration was not restricted.—Cooper v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 418.

§ 209 (S.C.) Where not raised below, a carrier, in an action for damages for refusal to transport freight at the regular interstate rate, cannot contend on appeal that there was no evidence of such refusal.—Aldrich v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 316.

§ 215 (S.C.) No advantage can be taken of a charge which misstated the issues where it was not made the ground of objection below.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 899.

§ 216 (W.Va.) Where the court modifies a requested instruction, but fails to inform the jury as required by Laws 1907, c. 33, §§ 4, 5 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 131, §§ 9a IV, 9a V) and gives the instruction as its own, and where no objection is made, the error will be deemed to have been waived.—Greer v. Arrington, 79 S. E. 720.

§ 219 (N.C.) A party cannot on appeal complain that the judge failed to find additional facts, where it does not appear that any request was made.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 222 (Ga.) The trial judge's failure to exercise his discretion in passing on a motion for new trial will be reviewed, though urged for the first time before the Supreme Court.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Anchors, 79 S. E. 153.

(C) Exceptions.

Little Rock Furniture Co. v. Jones & Co., 79 S. E. 375.

§ 260 (W.Va.) The erroneous admission of evidence will not be reviewed, when not excepted to below.—Greer v. Arrington, 79 S. E. 720.

§ 267 (Ga.App.) To confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Appeals there must be at least a general exception to the final judgment, and a writ of error will be dismissed where the only exception is to a refusal to allow an amendment to the answer.—Carpenter v. First Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 360.

§ 270 (Ga.) The trial judge's failure to exercise his discretion in passing on a motion for new trial will be reviewed, though not averred in the bill of exceptions or made the subject of a special exception.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Anchors, 79 S. E. 153.

(D) Motions for New Trial.

§ 299 (Ga.App.) A direct bill of exceptions will lie from the direction of a verdict.—Great Southern Accident & Fidelity Co. v. Guthrie, 79 S. E. 162.

§ 302 (Ga.) A motion for new trial, complaining of a refusal to permit a witness to answer a certain question, raises no question for review, where counsel does not state the answer expected.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

§ 302 (Ga.App.) Where the grounds for new trial complaining of the admission of evidence are incomplete, they cannot be considered on error.—Kerr Glass Mfg. Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 79 S. E. 381.

§ 302 (Ga.App.) An exception to the admission of documentary evidence cannot be considered where the document is not set forth in the motion for new trial literally or in substance.—Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 932.

VII. PARTIES.

§ 327 (Ga.App.) Where defendant in trover gives bail bond with surety, and on the trial the surety is discharged, a writ of error, assigning error upon the judgment discharging the surety, will be dismissed, where the surety is not served with a bill of exceptions, or made a party to the writ of error.—Wyatt v. Wyatt, 79 S. E. 372.

VII. REQUISITES AND PROCEEDINGS FOR TRANSFER OF CAUSE.

(C) Payment of Fees or Costs, and Bonds or Other Securities.

§ 360 (Ga.App.) The agent of a corporation is not by reason of his agency disqualified to become its surety on an appeal bond.—Willingham v. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., 79 S. E. 496.

(D) Writ of Error, Citation, or Notice.

§ 425 (S.C.) Under Code Civ. Proc. 1912, § 884, giving parties 10 days after service of notice of judgment entered in vacation in which to serve notice of appeal, a notice served 11 days after the filing of judgment, no notice of which was ever served upon the appellant, was in time.—Strickland v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 520.

VIII. EFFECT OF TRANSFER OF CAUSE OR PROCEEDINGS THEREFOR.

(A) Powers and Proceedings of Lower Court.

§ 440 (Ga.) A judgment sustaining a demurrer and dismissing the entire case, instead of allowing the case to stand as against one defendant, could not be corrected by the trial court while the case was pending in the Supreme Court.—McEwen v. Kelly, 79 S. E. 777.

§ 447 (N.C.) The denial of a motion for a restraining order for want of some material averment, or because the evidence is insufficient, does not prevent the renewal of the motion; but the motion cannot be made on the same facts after an appeal from the first order.—Bonner v. Rodman, 79 S. E. 271.

(B) Jurisdiction Acquired by Appellate Court.

§ 456 (S.C.) Jurisdiction of a justice of the Supreme Court to order an injunction granting appellant relief pending appeal will not be exercised unless the appellant's right to relief is beyond reasonable question.—Silverthorne v. Barnwell Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 519.

Comparative injury should be considered in determining an application to a single justice of the Supreme Court for a temporary injunction restraining a corporation from removing appellant from his office of general manager pending appeal.—Id.

X. RECORD AND PROCEEDINGS NOT IN RECORD.

(A) Matters to be Shown by Record.

§ 499 (Va.) A bill of exceptions to the admission of a letter in evidence, stating a mere general objection without any reason therefor, is not reviewable.—Davis v. Cole Bros., 79 S. E. 1033.

§ 502 (S.C.) Where a case merely stated that a motion was made for new trial "on various grounds," exceptions to the overruling of the motion on grounds specified in the exceptions could not be reviewed.—Mullaly v. Smyth, 79 S. E. 634.

§ 503 (Va.) The burden of showing the existence of appellate jurisdiction is on the appellant, which jurisdiction must affirmatively appear from the record.—C. L. Ritter Lumber Co. v. Coal Mountain Mining Co., 79 S. E. 322.

(B) Scope and Contents of Record.

§ 518 (Ga.App.) An amendment which is rejected is no part of the record, and an assignment of error on its refusal cannot be considered, unless the amendment appears in the bill of exceptions in substance or as an exhibit.—Parker v. G. O. Loving & Co., 79 S. E. 77.

§ 522 (W.Va.) To make the evidence a part of the record, it is only necessary to use such means of identification in the bills of exception and orders as make the adoption thereof reasonably certain.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1033.

An agreement that the facts in the case were, as shown by the transcript of the evidence, certified by the official stenographer, and marked for identification, held sufficient, when filed in the case, to make the evidence in an action for debt, dependent upon the same issues of fact as those involved in another action for assumption, a part of the record in the latter case.—Id.

§ 534 (Ga.App.) Where a bill of exceptions complaining of a refusal to sanction a petition for certiorari does not set forth the petition or have it attached as an exhibit, such petition is not part of the record; and the writ of error will be dismissed, though the petition is specified and set out as a part of the record.—Durham v. Page, 79 S. E. 361.

(C) Necessity of Bill of Exceptions, Case, or Statement of Facts.

§ 548 (W.Va.) Evidence not made part of the record by bill of exceptions will not be considered.—Bashar v. Pittsburg, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1009.

(H) Transmission, Filing, Printing, and Service of Copies.

§ 627 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, §§ 6185, 6186, a bill of exceptions will be dismissed where it is filed with the clerk of the county court on October 11th, but it and the transcript are not transmitted to the Supreme Court until November 13th, because plaintiff in error, an attorney, held the papers in his office.—Lang v. Montgomery, 79 S. E. 840.

§ 627 (Ga.App.) Where the bill of exceptions is not filed in the clerk's office within 15 days from the date of the trial judge's certificate thereto, as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 6167, the writ of error will be dismissed.—Allison v. Morgan, 79 S. E. 363.

§ 628 (Ga.App.) Delay in the transmission of a bill of exceptions and failure to transmit a transcript of the pleadings held not ground for dismissal, where it appears from the clerk's transcript that such delay was not the fault of counsel for plaintiff in error, and from the bill of exceptions that the failure to contain the pleadings was due to the case being tried upon agreement as to the pleadings after they had been lost.—Chitty v. Oliver, 79 S. E. 496.

§ 631 (N.C.) An appeal will be dismissed where there is a failure to print the record and briefs in accordance with the rules of the Supreme Court.—Bradshaw v. Stansberry, 79 S. E. 302.

(I) Defects, Objections, Amendment, and Correction.

§ 651 (W.Va.) Apparent want of service of a notice to take a deposition, read at the trial over a general objection, will not be regarded on error, where it appears from a corrected record, duly certified, that notice thereof was in fact accepted by counsel.—McGuire v. Old Sweet Springs Co., 79 S. E. 350.

(J) Conclusiveness and Effect, Impeaching and Contradicting.

§ 667 (Ga.App.) Where the bill of exceptions specifies "the defendant's answer on which the case was tried," and the clerk of the trial court transmits a paper purporting to be the answer, such paper must on appeal be treated as the answer, though counsel for plaintiff in error denies it to be such, especially where such counsel were not connected with the case below.—Peavy v. Sangster, 79 S. E. 215.

§ 670 (S.C.) Whether alleged misconduct of the jury had been called to the attention of the trial judge during the trial, not appearing in the "case," could not be shown by affidavit.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

(K) Questions Presented for Review.

§ 671 (Ga.App.) As the Court of Appeals has no other jurisdiction than the correction of errors in law and equity, a motion to dismiss a bill of exceptions depending on the adjudication of an issue of fact dehors the record will be overruled.—Modlin v. Smith, 79 S. E. 82.

§ 690 (N.C.) The exclusion of evidence cannot be reviewed where the record does not disclose what the witnesses would have testified to, or what was proposed to be proven.—In re Smith's Will, 79 S. E. 977.

Where the time to which proposed evidence related was material to its pertinency, exclusion of such evidence cannot be reviewed, where the record does not show the time to which it related.—Id.

Exclusion of a certain record from the evidence cannot be reviewed, where its contents are not sufficiently stated to permit the appellate court to pass on its admissibility.—Id.

XI. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

§ 722 (S.C.) Each assignment of error should be clearly and concisely stated in separate exceptions, or under proper subdivisions, and be free from repetition and argument, though the ground on which error is assigned may be stated when not otherwise apparent, but only one exception should be made for the same error, though it occur at different times.—Simpson v. Cox, 79 S. E. 102.

§ 728 (Ga.) An assignment of error, complaining that the court refused "to rule out all of the evidence interposed" on a certain point, without stating the objection made or setting out the evidence referred to, was insufficient.—Georgia & F. Ry. v. Newton, 79 S. E. 142.

§ 728 (Ga.) An assignment of error to the exclusion of certain testimony of the defendant, contradicting the testimony of witnesses for the plaintiff, which does not set out what the testimony of the witnesses was, or what that of the defendant would have been, is not sufficient.—Brotherton v. Stricklin, 79 S. E. 150.

§ 728 (Ga.App.) An assignment of error complaining of the exclusion of evidence was insufficient where it did not show what the witness would have testified to.—F. T. Hardy & Co. v. Jones Bros., 79 S. E. 246.

§ 753 (Ga.App.) A writ of error will be dismissed where the bill of exceptions contains no assignment of error on any ruling or judgment.—McClendon v. Temple Cotton Oil Co., 79 S. E. 361.

XII. BRIEFS.

§ 757 (Ga.App.) A brief of the evidence, prepared in good faith in an attempt to comply with the rules of practice, may be considered, though not as complete as it might have been.—Great Southern Accident & Fidelity Co. v. Guthrie, 79 S. E. 162.

§ 764 (N.C.) An appeal will be dismissed where there is a failure to print the record and briefs in accordance with the rules of the Supreme Court.—Bradshaw v. Stansberry, 79 S. E. 302.

XIII. DISMISSAL, WITHDRAWAL, OR ABANDONMENT.

§ 781 (N.C.) An appeal from a judgment in an action to obtain a construction of Laws 1907, c. 24, § 8, and the act of Congress ratified March 3, 1913, concerning the transportation of intoxicating liquors where it is apparent that both parties are interested on the same side of the case, will be dismissed.—Kistler v. Southern Ky. Co., 79 S. E. 676.

XV. HEARING AND REHEARING.

§ 833 (S.C.) A petition for rehearing is ex parte, and it is not necessary to serve notice thereof, or of the grounds, on opposing counsel.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

XVI. REVIEW.

(A) Scope and Extent in General.

§ 843 (Ga.) Where a judgment must be reversed on other ground, the appellate court will not consider the sufficiency of the instructions.—Coffey v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 568.

§ 866 (N.C.) On appeal from a judgment as of nonsuit, granted at the close of all the evidence, evidence for defendant in support of the defenses of independent contractor's negligence, contributory negligence of plaintiff, and negating defendant's negligence, cannot be considered.—Smith v. Cumberland County Agr. Society, 79 S. E. 632.

(B) Interlocutory, Collateral, and Supplementary Proceedings and Questions.

§ 871 (W.Va.) A decree in partition, establishing a lost deed and settling a disputed title, cannot be reviewed on appeal to the Supreme Court from a final decree, where the appeal is taken more than one year after rendition of the decree.—Wright v. Pittman, 79 S. E. 1091.

(C) Parties Entitled to Allege Error.

§ 882 (Ga.) Where, in an action by a wife to set aside a deed made by her to her husband on the ground that the deed was a forgery, and that it was executed without the approval of the superior court, as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 3009, defendant prevailed on his motion to strike from plaintiff's petition the latter ground, he could not complain on appeal that a part of his answer seeking to recover back the consideration named in the deed was stricken by the court.—Echols v. Green, 79 S. E. 557.

§ 882 (S.C.) Where the court gave the requests of defendant, he cannot complain of the error therein.—Bennett v. Southern Ry.-Carolina Division, 79 S. E. 710.

(E) Presumptions.

§ 901 (N.C.) Error in the rulings of the trial court will not be presumed, and appellant must not only show error, but he must make it appear plainly.—In re Smith's Will, 79 S. E. 977.

§ 914 (N.C.) Where, in an action on a forfeited recognizance, the case stated that the surety entered an appearance, without more, it would be presumed that a general appearance sufficient to waive the service of process was intended.—State v. White, 79 S. E. 297.

§ 927 (N.C.) On appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, the court must accept as true the facts which make for plaintiff's recovery, and construe them in the light most favorable to him.—Pate v. Blades, 79 S. E. 608.

§ 927 (N.C.) In reviewing a judgment of nonsuit, the appellate court must consider the evidence in the most favorable view for the plaintiff.—Latham v. Field, 79 S. E. 865.

§ 927 (N.C.) On appeal from a nonsuit the evidence must be taken in the light most favorable to plaintiff.—Shepherd v. North Carolina R. Co., 79 S. E. 968.

§ 928 (N.C.) Where the charge is not in the record, it will be presumed that it correctly stated the law.—Ellison v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 277; Harrison v. Same, Id. 281.

§ 928 (N.C.) Where the whole charge was not sent to the Supreme Court and there was no exception to the charge as to the burden of proof, held, that it would be assumed that the court correctly charged thereon.—Carroll v. Smith, 79 S. E. 497.

§ 928 (N.C.) Where the instructions are not in the record, it will be presumed that the verdict was found under proper instructions on the issues.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 680.

§ 930 (S.C.) As it must be assumed that the jury followed the charge, a judgment awarding a shipper damages for the refusal of an interstate carrier to transport goods at the rate published by the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot be reversed on the theory that notice to the carrier of the amount of the shipment was a condition precedent, where the charge limited the consideration of the jury to the damages arising from the refusal of the carrier to transport two cars which had already been ordered.—Aldrich v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 316.

§ 931 (S.C.) Where it was stipulated that the court should find the facts, it will be presumed that he disregarded all incompetent testimony.—Bennettsville & C. R. Co. v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 717.

§ 933 (S.C.) Where an order denying a motion for a new trial did not specify the grounds on which it was decided, it will be affirmed on appeal, if the record presented any grounds on which the motion could have been properly refused.—Miller v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 645.

§ 935 (Ga.App.) Where none of the questions raised by an affidavit of illegality can be determined without a consideration of judgments and records brought in question by the affidavit, and no such judgment was set out in the affidavit, it must be presumed that the court correctly determined these questions, or was unable to determine them from the indefinite averments of the affidavit.—Mobley v. Citizens' Bank of Valdosta, 79 S. E. 77.

(F) Discretion of Lower Court.

§ 959 (N.C.) Denial of a motion to amend a complaint, in the exercise of the court's discretion, will not be reviewed.—Cavanaugh v. Jarman, 79 S. E. 673.

§ 962 (N.C.) The discretion of the court in the dismissal of an action as to a proper party brought in at defendant's request is not reviewable.—Spruill v. Bank of Plymouth, 79 S. E. 262.

§ 969 (Ga.App.) The court's discretion in refusing an instruction that the testimony of a witness is to be construed most strongly against the party offering him when it is self-contradictory, vague, or equivocal, and that he cannot recover on the testimony of such witness alone, will not be disturbed on appeal.—Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 79 S. E. 242.

§ 973 (Ga.) While the trial judge may, within the restrictions prescribed by Civ. Code 1910, § 5331, direct a verdict, the Supreme Court will not reverse a judgment refusing to so do.—Ford v. Blackshear Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 576.

§ 977 (Ga.App.) Under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 6204, a judgment granting a first new trial could not be disturbed on appeal, where the verdict was not demanded by the law and the evidence.—Wolverine Soap Co. v. Sellers, 79 S. E. 246.

§ 977 (Ga.App.) The first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed on error, where the verdict was not demanded by the law and evidence, though the motion was based on a single ground; nor will the appellate court determine whether the trial court was right in granting the motion.—Helmy v. Savannah Office Bldg. Co., 79 S. E. 364.

§ 979 (Ga.) Where no error of law is complained of, and the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict, the discretion of the trial judge in refusing a new trial will not be disturbed.—Robinson v. Furr, 79 S. E. 455.

§ 979 (Ga.App.) Where the verdict is based on conflicting evidence, the discretion of the trial court in refusing a new trial cannot be controlled.—Dean v. Reynolds Home Mixture Guano Co., 79 S. E. 86.

§ 979 (Ga.App.) Where conflicting evidence would authorize a verdict for either party, the discretion of the trial court in overruling a motion for new trial will not be controlled on writ of error.—Franklin v. Fields & Chance, 79 S. E. 366.

§ 979 (N.C.) The Supreme Court will not review the ruling of the trial judge on a motion to set aside the verdict as against the weight of the evidence unless it clearly appears that there has been a gross abuse of his discretion.—Pender v. North State Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 298.

§ 979 (S.C.) Co. v. Johnson*, 79 S. E. 363.

§ 1002 (Ga.App.) A verdict supported by evidence will not be disturbed on writ of error, though the evidence is in sharp conflict, where no error of law was committed below.—Moore v. Kossor, 79 S. E. 246.

Shrader*, 79 S. E. 1033.

§ 1178 (Ga.) Where the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the petition in partition on all the grounds alleged and dismissed the case, the judgment will be reversed, though there be a defect of parties, and plaintiff will be given a reasonable opportunity to remedy the defect and thus prevent a dismissal.—*Wright v. 1195 (Ga.App.) Where the court on appeal held that a verdict for claimant was demanded by the evidence, the decision was the law of the case; and where on a second trial the evidence not differ, and the jury returned a verdict plaintiff in attachment, it was error to rule claimant's motion for a new trial.—Ison v. Clark, 79 S. E. 86.

9 (N.C.) An appearance will not be considered special simply because so called; hence a party seeking to set aside a default waives defects in the summons by asking leave to file an answer and cannot move to set aside the judgment on the ground of the want of jurisdiction.—Bell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

17 (Ga.App.) Appearance and pleading to merits are a waiver of want of jurisdiction; but, as defenses in attachment may be made at any time before judgment, a motion to dismiss a declaration for failure to allege jurisdiction may be filed simultaneously with a plea to the merits.—Drake v. Lewis, 79 S. E. 107.

19 (Ga.App.) The giving of a replevy bond does not preclude a defendant in attachment from objecting to jurisdiction over his person.—Wake v. Lewis, 79 S. E. 167.

§ 49 (Ga.) On an application by a defendant, imprisoned under bail process in an action to recover personalty, to be discharged under Civ. Stevens*, 79 S. E. 840.

Where a defendant, imprisoned under bail process in an action for personalty, applies to be discharged under Civ. Oral direction by the mayor of Raleigh to his chief of police to prevent the exhibition of an alleged immoral show at a theater held immaterial in character, and insufficient to cause the arrest of plaintiff, while in the theater before it was open, without a warrant.—Id.

ASSIGNMENTS.

See Covenants, §§ 57, 69; Execution, § 2; Mortgages, § 255; Taxation, § 742; Waters and Water Courses, § 190.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Property, Estates, and Rights Assignable.

§ 3 (Ga.) The common-law rule that choses in action are not assignable, so as to convey title, but only an equitable interest, is changed by the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 3653.—Cowart v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

§ 23 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3655, providing that a right of action not involving directly or indirectly a right of property is not assignable, and section 3653, providing that all choses in action arising under contract may be assigned, a cause of action against a carrier for injury to goods awaiting delivery, arising from its negligence as a warehouseman, is assignable.—Benjamin-Ozburn Co. v. Morrow Transfer & Storage Co., 79 S. E. 753.

§ 26 (W.Va.) A right of action for a penalty, given by Code 1906, c. 79, § 7, for the unlawful mining of coal within five feet of an adjacent owner's line, is not assignable.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1083.

(B) Mode and Sufficiency of Assignment.

§ 34 (Ga.App.) While all choses in an action are assignable under Civ. Code 1910, § 3653, the assignment must not rest in parol, but must be in writing.—Herring v. First Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 359.

§ 50 (Ga.) A written order by a tie company on a railroad company for the price of cross-ties furnished to the tie company and by it sold to the railroad company held to constitute an equitable assignment of such fund, though not an assignment of the legal title thereto.—Brown v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 152.

In an equitable proceeding instituted by the last purchaser of railroad ties against several persons, including the original sellers in whose favor an order had been issued on plaintiff for the price by the intermediate seller, in which proceeding the defendants were required to interplead, held that the order was enforceable as an equitable assignment.—Id.

§ 58 (Ga.) When rights under contract are coupled with obligations to be performed by the contractor and involve a relation of personal confidence, the contract cannot be assigned without the consent of the other contracting party.—Cowart v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

II. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

§ 76 (Ga.App.) An indorsement on a note, containing a reservation of title to property therein described, "for value received we hereby transfer and assign all the right, title, and interest we have in the within note together with the security mentioned in said note to," etc., and dated and signed, was sufficient to pass title to both note and property.—Blakely Artesian Ice Co. v. Clarke, 79 S. E. 528.

IV. ACTIONS.

§ 120 (W.Va.) Where an attempted assignment is made of the penalty provided by Code

1906, c. 79, § 7, for the unlawful mining of coal within five feet of an adjacent owner's line, the alleged assignee cannot sue for the penalty in the name of his assignor.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1083.

§ 131 (W.Va.) The objection of nonassignability of the claim sued on is available on demurrer to the declaration.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1083.

ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

See Bankruptcy.

ASSOCIATIONS.

See Agriculture; Building and Loan Associations; Intoxicating Liquors, § 146.

ASSUMPSIT, ACTION OF.

See Appeal and Error, § 1175; Livery Stable Keepers, § 7; Money Received.

§ 8 (W.Va.) Assumpsit is not the proper form of action for the recovery of damages for a mere wrong. It lies only to recover from the defendant that which is in his hands and belongs to the plaintiff.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1083.

§ 19 (W.Va.) A declaration in assumpsit, based on a carrier's undertaking to safely transport goods, need not aver a promise to pay money.—Bashar v. Pittsburgh, O., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1009.

ASSUMPTION.

Of risk, see Master and Servant, §§ 204, 206; Negligence, § 1.

ATTACHMENT.

See Abatement and Revival, § 5; Equity, § 26; Evidence, §§ 129, 165; Execution; False Imprisonment, § 7; Landlord and Tenant, § 229; Witnesses, § 367.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS.

(A) Nature of Remedy, Causes of Action, and Parties.

§ 2 (Ga.App.) The procedure on attachments for purchase money does not differ from attachments based on other grounds enumerated in Civ. Code 1910, § 5055.—Avery & Co. v. Pope, 79 S. E. 946.

(B) Grounds of Attachment.

§ 47 (Ga.) In attachment, the affidavit upon which the attachment was issued and the attachment issued thereon held inadmissible as evidence, though competent to go before the jury as pleadings.—Dale v. Christian, 79 S. E. 1127.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE.

(B) Affidavits.

§ 91 (Va.) That an attachment affidavit was written on a printed form containing the name "Corporation Court," instead of "Court of Law and Chancery," at the top of the paper did not invalidate the affidavit, where such mistake was not repeated elsewhere in the paper and the clerk certified that the affidavit was filed in the court of law and chancery.—Bernard v. McClanahan, 79 S. E. 1059.

§ 106 (Ga.App.) A statement, in an attachment affidavit, that defendant is indebted, is equivalent to the word "due," as used in Civ. Code 1910, § 5056.—Avery & Co. v. Pope, 79 S. E. 946.

V. LEVY, LIEN, AND CUSTODY AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

§ 192 (Ga.App.) Where attached property has been replevied, the attachment is dissolved, the bond substituted for the property, and the case stands as if founded on ordinary principles.—Watters v. Southern Fixture & Cabinet Co., 79 S. E. 360.

VII. QUASHING, VACATING, DISSOLUTION, OR ABANDONMENT.

§ 241 (Ga.App.) In attachment, failure of the petition to show jurisdiction of the person may be taken advantage of by a motion at the trial term, and unless cured by amendment the declaration should be dismissed.—Drake v. Lewis, 79 S. E. 167.

X. LIABILITIES ON BONDS OR UNDERTAKINGS.

§ 339 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5113, providing that after attached property has been replevied by the defendant it shall be allowable for the plaintiff to take judgment against the defendant and his securities for the amount he may recover, such judgment may be rendered upon a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff.—Watters v. Southern Fixture & Cabinet Co., 79 S. E. 360.

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

See Bills and Notes, §§ 471, 485, 534; Corporations, § 557; Costs, § 41; Criminal Law, §§ 636, 641, 723, 730; Garnishment, § 42; Injunction, § 239; New Trial, § 29; Partition, § 114; Trial, § 123; Witnesses, §§ 5, 867.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN OF ATTORNEY.

(B) Lien.

§ 189 (Ga.App.) The lien of an attorney at law upon the subject-matter of a suit which he has been employed to prosecute or defend, under Civ. Code 1910, § 3364, par. 2, cannot be rendered ineffective by a contract of his client with the opposite party.—Payton v. Wheeler, 79 S. E. 81.

§ 190 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff settles her suit after it has been filed without payment of the fees due her attorney, the attorney may prosecute the suit to a termination to recover the fees due him under his employment contract.—Franklin v. Ford, 79 S. E. 366.

Where plaintiff has settled the suit without payment of the fees due her attorney, the attorney need not amend the pleadings, in order to entitle him to prosecute the suit to a termination for the fees due him.—Id.

AUTHORITY.

See Principal and Agent, §§ 92-131.

AUTOMOBILES.

See Appeal and Error, § 1066; Livery Stable Keepers; Sunday; Trial, § 251.

AWNINGS.

See Municipal Corporations, §§ 667, 697.

BAIL

See Appeal and Error, § 327; Habeas Corpus, § 110.

II. IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

§ 75 (N.C.) Since a recognizance binds accused not to depart without leave of court, it was no defense to a forfeiture that his departure without leave occurred after he had pleaded guilty, and while the court had the cause under advisement, deliberating as to the punishment.—State v. White, 79 S. E. 297.

BAILMENT.

See Carriers, §§ 44-177; Livery Stable Keepers, § 11; Pledges; Sunday.

§ 18 (Ga.App.) Under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 3501, a depositary for hire has a lien upon the goods for his hire, and may retain them until paid.—Jeems v. Lewis, 79 S. E. 235.

That the defendant in an action for trover holds the property sued for as a depositary for hire, and has not been paid, is a valid defense at law.—Id.

§ 18 (Ga.App.) Failure to record a lien for repairing personal property within 10 days renders the lien unenforceable, where possession of the property is surrendered to the bailor.—Gearreld v. Woodruff, 79 S. E. 355.

Persons having a right to a lien on personal property for repairs thereon waived their lien, where they agreed to balance accounts from time to time with the person for whom the repairs were made.—Id.

§ 31 (Ga.App.) Where, in a bailor's action for goods lost, plaintiff proved delivery to the defendant bailee, a failure to redeliver on demand, and the value of the goods, the burden shifted to defendant to show ordinary diligence in caring for them.—Moultrie Compress Co. v. Byrom Cotton Co., 79 S. E. 589.

§ 31 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3469, in all cases of bailment, after proof of loss, the burden is on the bailee to show proper diligence.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bunn, 79 S. E. 947.

Evidence in a bailor's action for the loss of two freight cars from the giving way of a trestle held to show that the cause of the wreck was the defective and unsafe condition of the trestle, and not any defects in the cars.—Id.

BANKRUPTCY.

See Corporations, § 265; Limitation of Actions, §§ 21, 29; Venue, § 22.

III. ASSIGNMENT, ADMINISTRATION, AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANKRUPT'S ESTATE.

(B) Assignment, and Title, Rights, and Remedies of Trustee in General.

§ 145 (Ga.) A trustee in bankruptcy of a trading corporation succeeds to any right which it may have to sue directors for loss from a breach of duty.—McEwen v. Kelly, 79 S. E. 777.

(E) Actions by or Against Trustee.

§ 298 (Ga.) An action by a bankrupt's trustee brought in 1911 before the estate was closed to recover against a transferee for value of goods received from the bankrupt in 1907 in payment of a pre-existing debt less than four months prior to the filing of the petition, authorized by Bankruptcy Act, § 60b, amended by Act Cong. Feb. 5, 1903, is governed by the limitation prescribed by section 11d of the act, requiring actions to be brought within two years from the closing of the estate.—Arnold Grocery Co. v. Shackelford, 79 S. E. 470.

§ 302 (Ga.) A petition in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy against the directors of a bankrupt corporation held insufficient to show a case for recovery except as against a director who was also secretary and treasurer.—McEwen v. Kelly, 79 S. E. 777.

(F) Claims Against and Distribution of Estate.

§ 363 (Ga.App.) That a claim is proved and allowed in bankruptcy does not constitute a bar to a creditor's subsequent action for the balance, where the claim is for goods obtained by the debtor by false representations.—J. K.

Orr Shoe Co. v. Upshaw & Powledge, 79 S. E. 362.

That a creditor, after having proved his claim in bankruptcy and having the same allowed, received a dividend, did not constitute a waiver of the debtor's fraud in purchasing the goods for which the claim was made, and hence constituted no bar to the creditor's subsequent action against the debtor for the balance of his claim.—Id.

V. RIGHTS, REMEDIES, AND DISCHARGE OF BANKRUPT.

§ 421 (Ga.) Under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, § 17 (a) as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, § 5, a creditor holding a note, which he reduces to judgment after discharge of the debtor in bankruptcy, cannot enforce an execution on such judgment against the debtor's property acquired after the discharge.—Ford v. Blackshear Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 576.

§ 426 (Ga.) While under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 17(a), as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, § 5, it is not essential, in order to bring debts within the provision excepting liabilities for fraud, that there be a judgment for fraud, yet, where a creditor, instead of enforcing the liability based on fraud, enforces a judgment on the contract, the debtor's discharge will be effective as to after-acquired property.—Ford v. Blackshear Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 576.

§ 426 (Ga.App.) A discharge in bankruptcy does not release a bankrupt from liability for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations.—J. K. Orr Shoe Co. v. Upshaw & Powledge, 79 S. E. 362.

§ 428 (Ga.App.) Discharge in bankruptcy of the principal defendant would not oust the court of jurisdiction of a defendant secondarily liable.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 237.

BANKS AND BANKING.

See Appeal and Error, § 1052; Bills and Notes, §§ 151, 356, 537; Bonds, § 55; Equity, § 48; Principal and Surety, § 152; Trial, §§ 145, 253; Usury, § 127.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION IN GENERAL.

§ 2 (Ga.App.) The term "bank," in the commonly accepted sense, applies to an institution exercising the main functions of a bank, such as receiving money on deposit, discounting commercial paper in the usual course of trade, and loaning money on approved collateral.—Dunn v. State, 79 S. E. 170.

II. BANKING CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

(D) Officers and Agents.

§ 61 (Ga.App.) That a trust company is incidentally empowered to perform some of the functions of a bank does not make it "a chartered bank," within Pen. Code 1910, § 204, making directors of an insolvent bank subject to prosecution.—Dunn v. State, 79 S. E. 170.

A "chartered bank," within Pen. Code 1910, § 204, making the directors of an insolvent chartered bank subject to prosecution, means a corporation having the powers and exercising as the main object of its creation all or some of those functions of a bank prescribed by Civ. Code 1910, § 2206.—Id.

A company, incorporated merely as a trust company, under Civ. Code 1910, § 2815 et seq., is not a chartered bank, though it exercises as an incident to the main object of its creation the power to receive trust funds on deposit and the power to loan money.—Id.

Under the act of 1898 (Civ. Code 1910, § 2815 et seq.), providing that incorporated trust companies may exercise the rights and be subject to the same liabilities and restrictions as apply to banks, upon compliance with the laws relating to the incorporation of banks, a trust company may obtain a charter as a bank, and when it does so it becomes a "chartered bank," within Pen. Code 1910, § 204.—Id.

§ 62 (Ga.App.) Where an indictment, found against the director of an insolvent bank, under Pen. Code 1910, § 204, alleged that the corporation named, of which defendant was a director, was "a corporation duly incorporated and chartered under the laws of Georgia, and doing and carrying on a banking business, and was a bank," it sufficiently averred that the institution named was "a chartered bank," within such statute.—Dunn v. State, 79 S. E. 170.

In the prosecution of a director of an insolvent bank, under Pen. Code 1910, § 204, the burden was on the state to prove that the trust company named in the indictment was operating under a bank charter.—Id.

III. FUNCTIONS AND DEALINGS.

(B) Representation of Bank by Officers and Agents.

§ 112 (N.C.) That the president of a banking company misappropriated funds of a correspondent bank, of which he was cashier, did not charge such banking company with knowledge of the misappropriation so as to preclude recovery of an indebtedness from the correspondent bank, since its president, in misappropriating the funds, acted independently and adversely to its interests.—Corporation Commission v. Bank of Jonesboro, 79 S. E. 308.

(C) Deposits.

§ 154 (N.C.) In an action by a depositor against a bank to recover the amount of a check, paid by the bank after notice not to do so, the payee of the check is not a necessary party, where plaintiff claimed no relief against him, and the bank denied any notice.—Spruill v. Bank of Plymouth, 79 S. E. 262.

§ 154 (S.C.) A bank seeking to set off against deposits money paid on the depositor's debt without his authority must plead and prove that the depositor ratified such payment, and, in the absence of an appropriate pleading, evidence of such a ratification is inadmissible.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 899.

Where a depositor had two accounts, one in her name individually and the other as administratrix, but the money in both belonged to her as an individual, her husband's will under which she was acting is inadmissible in an action for the balance due her upon her individual account.—Id.

(D) Collections.

§ 165 (N.C.) That drafts collected by a bank for plaintiff were for shipments of liquor did not defeat plaintiff's right to recover from the bank the amount collected.—Arey Distilling Co. v. Mutual Aid Banking Co., 79 S. E. 287.

BAR.

See Bankruptcy, § 363.

BASTARDS.

See Action, § 53.

I. ILLEGITIMACY IN GENERAL.

§ 3 (N.C.) When a child is born in wedlock, the law conclusively presumes its legitimacy unless the circumstances show that the husband could not have begotten it, but such presumption may be rebutted by proof that the husband could not have been the father, as that he was impotent or could not have had access.—Ewell v. Ewell, 79 S. E. 509.

On an issue as to the legitimacy of a child born in wedlock, access between husband and wife is presumed until otherwise plainly proved; nothing being allowed to impugn the legitimacy of the child short of proof of facts showing it to be impossible for the husband to have been the father.—Id.

II. CUSTODY, SUPPORT, AND PROTECTION.

§ 17 (Ga.App.) An agreement by the father of an illegitimate child to pay the mother a certain amount for its support is "founded on a good consideration.—Franklin v. Ford, 79 S. E. 306.

Where the father of an illegitimate child contracts with the mother to pay her so much a month for the child's support, the mother, and not the child, has a right to sue on the contract.—Id.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(D) Acceptance.

§ 83 (N.C.) Where persons accept an order upon the condition that they will pay on it, if they are indebted to the drawer, the amount of their indebtedness, and it develops that they owed him nothing at the time of the acceptance, they are not liable; but, where it develops that they owed him something, they are liable to the extent of such indebtedness not exceeding the amount of the order and accrued interest.—Craig & Wilson v. Stewart & Jones, 79 S. E. 1100.

(E) Consideration.

§ 93 (N.C.) The release of the drawer of an order is a sufficient consideration for an acceptance of the order.—Craig & Wilson v. Stewart & Jones, 79 S. E. 1100.

(F) Validity.

§ 103 (Ga.App.) A true statement by plaintiff's agent in procuring a note sued on does not constitute fraud, though such agent did not fully state the contents of the note, where defendant is able to read, and there is no reason why he should have reposed special confidence in the agent, and no exigency compelled him to haste in executing the note.—Harrison v. Lee, 79 S. E. 211.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 123 (Ga.App.) Recovery may be had against a railroad on a draft signed by one describing himself as president, on proof that both parties understood that it was the obligation of the railroad, and that it received the consideration furnished, and authorized the execution of a contract, or ratified it.—Ocilla Southern R. Co. v. Morton, 79 S. E. 480.

III. MODIFICATION, RENEWAL, AND RESCISSION.

§ 141 (Ga.) A second note, which recited that the makers "have pledged * * * as collateral security" the original purchase-money note and "security for the same," held not a mere agreement collateral to the original note, extending the time of payment and increasing the rate of interest, but a new note for the balance due on the first note, bearing interest at the fixed rate, the first note to be held as collateral for the second.—Strickland v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 539.

Where a second note constituted a new note for the balance due on the first, the first note to be held as collateral, the holder could not, after maturity of the second note, bring suit on the first, and supplement its terms by applying to it the increased rate of interest specified in the second note.—Id.

IV. NEGOTIABILITY AND TRANSFER.

(A) Instruments Negotiable.

§ 151 (W.Va.) A certificate of deposit issued by a bank, not subject to check and payable to the depositor's order on return of the certificate properly indorsed, is negotiable under Code 1906, c. 99, § 7.—Pomeroy Nat. Bank v. Huntington Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 662.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES ON INDORSEMENT OR TRANSFER.

(B) Indorsement for Transfer.

§ 301 (Va.) An indorser held to have waived the defense to a note based on the holder's surrender of collateral security, where he subsequently indorsed renewals with knowledge of the facts, and to be estopped to assert such defense.—Lynch v. O'Brien, 79 S. E. 389.

(D) Bona Fide Purchasers.

§ 330 (Ga.App.) Before the holder of a note payable to another can assert the rights of a bona fide purchaser for value, the payee must have formally assigned or indorsed the note to him in writing before its maturity.—Herring v. First Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 359.

§ 330 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 2178, a negotiation of a note by delivery without indorsement passes only the equitable title and will not give the transferee title free from defenses good against the payee.—Elgin City Banking Co. v. McEachern, 79 S. E. 680.

An equitable owner of a note takes it subject to defenses good against the holder; and, where the note was procured by fraud, the transferee's want of notice of the fraud is immaterial.—Id.

§ 337 (Ga.App.) A purchaser of a note on which a corporation was an accommodation indorser, held not a bona fide holder where he was chargeable with notice of the character and purpose of the indorsement.—Savannah Ice Co.

v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

§ 356 (N.C.) Where a bank habitually credits a depositor's accounts with negotiable instruments indorsed to it by him, but charged against the account all such instruments as were not paid, the bank was not a bona fide holder for value.—Third Nat. Bank of St. Louis v. Exum, 79 S. E. 498.

§ 367 (Ga.App.) Where a corporation having power to do so indorses commercial paper, a bona fide purchaser, without notice, will be protected, even though the indorsement was made merely for the accommodation of third persons.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

VII. PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE.

§ 426 (Ga.App.) In an action on a note, a plea of payment, without evidence to show that it was made to an authorized agent of the holder, or that the money ever reached the holder, was no defense.—Edwards v. Savannah Trust Co., 79 S. E. 35.

VIII. ACTIONS.

§ 432 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser before maturity of the notes sued on, it was error to exclude defendant's evidence that the consideration for the notes had partially failed.—Herring v. First Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 359.

§ 454 (Ga.App.) A petition in an action on a note against A., as maker, and B., as surety, which action is brought in the county of the surety's residence is not demurrable as showing that the maker does not reside in the county where action is brought, though from the copy of the note it appears that B. apparently signed as an indorser, since an apparent indorser may be shown by parol to be in fact a surety, in which case the maker and surety may both be sued in the county where the surety resides.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 237.

§ 471 (Ga.) An allegation in a petition that plaintiff had served on defendant a written notice of its intention "to bring this suit to this term of this court and to claim attorney's fees in accordance with the terms of said original note," together with a prayer for the recovery of such fees, held sufficient to show that the notice, given pursuant to Civ. Code 1910, § 4252, was a notice of intention to sue on the original note and seek to recover attorney's fees according to its terms, and not under a second note.—Strickland v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 539.

§ 471 (Ga.) Where the petition in an action on a note providing for attorney's fees alleged the giving of the required 10 days' notice of intention to bring suit, it was unnecessary to attach to it a copy of such notice.—Setze v. First Nat. Bank of Pensacola, Fla., 79 S. E. 540.

§ 481 (Ga.App.) An amended plea held sufficiently charge, in the absence of a special demurrer and as against a general attack that it presented no defense, that the note sued on was without consideration, and that plaintiff with knowledge of this fact conspired with the payer to collect same from defendant, the maker.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 237.

§ 485 (Ga.App.) In a suit on a note conditioned for the payment of attorney's fees, if collected through an attorney, defendant's unsworn denial that the statutory notice has been given is sufficient; the obligation to pay attorney's fees being conditional.—Walker v. Wood, 79 S. E. 905.

§ 497 (N.C.) Where there was allegation and proof tending to show that the execution of the note was procured by fraud, the burden was on plaintiff to show that it was a holder in due course.—Fidelity Trust Co. v. Ellen, 79 S. E. 202.

§ 497 (N.C.) Under Revised 1905, § 2208, providing that, when it appears that the title of any one who negotiated an instrument was defective, the burden was upon the holder to show that he was a holder in due course, evidence that there was fraud in the execution of a note casts upon the holder the burden of proving that he was a bona fide purchaser for value.—Third Nat. Bank of St. Louis v. Exum, 79 S. E. 498.

§ 499 (Ga.App.) Where the maker of a note pays it to any other than the holder, in an action on the note, the burden is on him to show payment to one authorized to receive it, or that the money reached the holder's hands.—Edwards v. Savannah Trust Co., 79 S. E. 35.

§ 534 (Ga.App.) Where a note stipulates for attorney's fees on proof that the maker was served with 10 days' notice under Civ. Code 1910, § 4252, attorney's fees cannot be recovered, unless the answer of defendant or the testimony shows that he was notified as required by law.—Turner v. Bank of Maysville, 79 S. E. 180.

In an action on a note, where defendant is in court, it is error, without proof that defendant was notified of the claim for attorney's fees, as required by Civ. Code, § 4252, to enter judgment for attorney's fees.—Id.

§ 534 (Ga.App.) In an action on a note conditioned for the payment of attorney's fees, in case of collection through an attorney, plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for attorney's fees as upon an unconditional contract in writing.—Walker v. Wood, 79 S. E. 905.

§ 537 (Ga.App.) Where the defense to a note was merely that it was without consideration, and such defense was supported by no evidence, the question whether plaintiff purchased the note before or after maturity was immaterial, and the court properly directed a verdict for plaintiff.—Glass v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 306.

§ 537 (N.C.) In an action by a bank on notes procured by fraud and indorsed to it, evidence held sufficient to take to the jury the question whether the plaintiff was a bona fide holder for value, or merely held the notes for collection.—Third Nat. Bank of St. Louis v. Exum, 79 S. E. 498.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 55 (W.Va.) A bank cashier's bond conditioned that he shall faithfully account for all moneys coming into his hands as such cashier held an indemnity to the bank, though its officers are named therein as obligees, "as" president, and "as" directors of the bank in its corporate name; the word "as" designating the official relation of the obligees to the real beneficiary.—Clark v. Nickell, 79 S. E. 1020.

BOUNDARIES.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 1002, 1057; Evidence, §§ 460, 461.

I. DESCRIPTION.

§ 3 (N.C.) Where the parties at the time of the conveyance of land actually made a corner setting up a monument, the boundaries by the monument will govern, notwithstanding errors in the description of the deed when run by courses and distances.—Allison v. Kenion, 79 S. E. 1110.

§ 3 (W.Va.) Where one or more monuments of a tract of land have been ascertained, the courses and distances have controlling effect in locating the others as to the identity of which the evidence is conflicting.—Lewis v. Yates, 79 S. E. 831.

§ 3 (W.Va.) While a call for quantity will not control other definite description of land, yet, where all other elements of description are ambiguous, the quantity called for in an oil and gas lease may be considered, in ascertaining the land covered.—Lovett v. West Virginia Central Gas Co., 79 S. E. 1007.

§ 11 (W.Va.) A call for an adjoining tract as a boundary of leased premises in a lease containing a clear description of the premises cannot be rejected.—Reserve Gas Co. v. Carbon Black Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 1002.

II. EVIDENCE, ASCERTAINMENT, AND ESTABLISHMENT.

§ 35 (N.C.) Hearsay and common reputation is received in boundary disputes, provided it has its origin at a time comparatively remote, and attaches to some monument or natural object, or is fortified by evidence of occupation and acquiescence giving the land a definite location.—Locklear v. Paul, 79 S. E. 617.

§ 36 (Va.) In ejectment involving disputed boundary, evidence as to the execution and contents of lost title bond for land adjoining plaintiff's line held properly received when limited to throwing light on the location of the line.—Honaker v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 391.

§ 37 (W.Va.) A subsequent survey, calling for lines of the older one, is not a monument thereof, and the call therefor is only a circumstance, admissible under some circumstances, as evidence of the location of the lines of the older survey.—Lewis v. Yates, 79 S. E. 831.

§ 47 (N.C.) Where the grantee wrote the deed, measured and located the land, and planted the monument and, so long as he continued the owner, acquiesced in grantor's possession up to the monument, the grantee's grantee is estopped from claiming land of the grantor beyond the point of the monument.—Allison v. Kenion, 79 S. E. 1110.

§ 7 (N.C.) The establishment of a county bridge rests in the discretion of the county commissioners, and, in the absence of fraud or oppression, their discretion cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court.—Davenport v. Commissioners of Pitt County, 79 S. E. 423.

III. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES TO PRINCIPAL.

§ 20 (Ga.App.) The validity, form, and effect of a real estate broker's employment contract, which is made and to be performed within the state of Georgia, are controlled by the laws of Georgia.—Hatton v. W. D. Morton & Co., 79 S. E. 371.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN.

§ 42 (Ga.App.) A person who was not registered as a real estate dealer, as required by law, could not recover a commission for the sale of real estate.—Hatton v. W. D. Morton & Co., 79 S. E. 371.

§ 54 (Ga.) A real estate broker has ordinarily earned his commission when he finds a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to buy, and offers to buy, on the terms stipulated.—Smith v. Tatum, 79 S. E. 775.

§ 60 (Ga.App.) Where a broker holding an option to buy land including the timber thereon transfers same by a contract binding the transferee to pay him a certain commission for procuring the option, the fact that the owner subsequently declines to make a conveyance including the timber, and that the transferee accepts a deed excluding the timber, will not affect the broker's right to his commission.—Witt v. Baker, 79 S. E. 243.

§ 63 (Ga.) Where the owner refuses to sell to the purchaser procured by the broker, it is not ordinarily essential to the broker's right to his commission that the purchaser shall actually tender the price.—Smith v. Tatum, 79 S. E. 775.

V. ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION.

§ 82 (Ga.) Proof of a defendant owner's contract to convey to plaintiff for a certain amount in cash, leaving him to retain any greater sum which he might receive from another purchaser, held at variance with an allegation that defendant employed plaintiff to procure a purchaser, and agreed that, if plaintiff should sell the property for more than a certain amount he should have the excess as compensation for his services and expenses.—Smith v. Tatum, 79 S. E. 775.

§ 86 (W.Va.) Evidence in an action on a contract for procuring a vendor to sell defendant a tract of timber land held sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.—Wilson v. Johnson, 79 S. E. 734.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

§ 32 (S.C.) In an action by a building and loan association on bonds secured by a mortgage, a bond cannot, in computing the amount due, be split into two loans, but must be treated as one loan.—Union Building & Loan Ass'n v. McNally, 79 S. E. 796.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREOF.

§ 3 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 3333, relative to breaking or entering dwelling houses, buildings where personal property shall be, or uninhabited houses, with intent to commit a felony, the intent to commit a felony is an essential element of the offenses specified in all the clauses of the section, and not merely of that of breaking and entering an uninhabited house.—State v. Spear, 79 S. E. 869.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 47 (N.C.) A verdict finding accused guilty of housebreaking with no intent to commit a felony amounted to a verdict of acquittal, and accused should therefore have been discharged.—State v. Spear, 79 S. E. 869.

BY-LAWS.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 34 (Ga.) An action by the heirs of a grantor, with the consent of his administrator, to cancel a deed for want of mental capacity to execute same, held barred by laches, where the deed was executed in 1896, and the grantor died in 1897, and defendants had been in possession since that time, and suit was not brought until 1910, and no excuse was shown for the delay.—James v. Hill, 79 S. E. 782.

Where heirs of the grantor, with consent of his administrator, sued to cancel a deed for want of mental capacity to execute same, and it appeared that the administrator, as clerk of the superior court, recorded the deed, and one plaintiff was a witness to it, and that plaintiffs knew that defendants were in possession, and the grantor's mental condition, they could not set up lack of knowledge to prevent their action, commenced nearly 14 years after the deed was recorded, being barred by laches.—Id.

§ 35 (Ga.) In a wife's action to cancel a deed to defendants as obtained by fraud and coercion of her husband, she and her husband having joined in its execution, an administrator appointed on her husband's estate pending the suit and before the appearance term was a necessary party.—Biggs v. Silvey, 79 S. E. 857.

§ 59 (N.C.) In action to set aside deeds, judgment against plaintiff for betterments under Revisal 1905, § 652, without deducting the rents and profits adjudged to plaintiff, held improper.—Daniel v. Dixon, 79 S. E. 425.

Under Revisal 1905, § 652, in action to set aside deeds, judgment for defendant, who was still a tenant in common with plaintiff after the deeds were set aside, for the full value of betterments, held erroneous.—Id.

CARRIERS.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION OF COMMON CARRIERS.*(A) In General.

§ 2 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, providing a penalty for carrier's failure to promptly adjust claims, held constitutional.—Varnville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

(B) Interstate and International Transportation.

§ 32 (S.C.) An interstate carrier can charge no more and no less than the rate filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and published as the lawful rate, and a greater or less charge cannot be justified on the ground of mistake.—Aldrich v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 316.

§ 36 (S.C.) In an action against a carrier for damages for refusal to carry goods at the rate filed with and published by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the question whether the carrier refused to transport the goods except at an excessive rate held for the jury.—Aldrich v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 316.

Where an interstate carrier refused to transport goods at the regular interstate rate, the measure of damages was not the mere difference between the correct rate and the quoted rate where, by reason of the higher quotation, the shipper was forced to forego the shipment and sell the goods at a loss.—Id.

Under the Interstate Commerce Act, providing that the certificate of the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the correct rate, letters of an interstate carrier's general freight agent, quoting an incorrect rate, are admissible in an action by a shipper for damages for refusal to carry goods at the regular rate.—Id.

II. CARRIAGE OF GOODS.*(A) Delivery to Carrier.

§ 44 (N.C.) Where piling had been placed by a shipper in the yards of a railroad company and two cars loaded, and the railroad company refused to transport that already loaded or furnish cars for that in the yard, the shipper was not required to deliver other piling for which he had also demanded cars in order to recover damages for the railroad's refusal to furnish cars.—Bell v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 421.

§ 45 (N.C.) Revisal 1908, § 2634a, making a railroad company liable to a penalty for failure to furnish cars upon written demand, does not affect the common-law duty of the railroad to receive and transport freight tendered it within a reasonable time.—Bell v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 421.

(C) Custody and Control of Goods.

§ 76 (Ga.App.) A transfer by a trustee in bankruptcy of personal property belonging to the bankrupt, in the possession of a carrier as warehouseman conferred on the transferee the right to recover damages for loss of the property owing to the negligence of the carrier.—Benjamin-Osburn Co. v. Morrow Transfer & Storage Co., 79 S. E. 753.

§ 76 (S.C.) The consignee of freight who purchased the goods and received a bill of lading was the real party in interest to an action against the railroad company for damages for the destruction en route, the title being in the consignee, in the absence of an intention or agreement to the contrary.—Deaver-Jeter Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 709.

(D) Transportation and Delivery by Carrier.

§ 85 (Ga.) Where lumber in car load lots was transported to its destination, and the consignee was given notice to receive and unload the lumber, the liability of the railroad as a common carrier ceased.—Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Dixon, 79 S. E. 1118.

§ 86 (Ga.) Where a carrier delivered freight at its destination, it was not bound, at the request of the consignee, to deliver the cars to another carrier, to be transported to a different part of the same city.—Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Dixon, 79 S. E. 1118.

Where a consignee relied on a usage of a carrier on receiving freight in a city to deliver it to another carrier to be transported to a different part of the city, the consignee could hold the carrier to that custom only which required such a delivery on request of the other carrier.—Id.

(E) Delay in Transportation or Delivery.

§ 105 (Ga.App.) Where contractors for a public building were delayed by failure to deliver in a reasonable time a shipment of finishing material, due to the carrier's negligence, loss sustained for wages paid to idle workmen, while awaiting the shipment, expenses of tracing the same, forfeit which the contractors were compelled to pay from the delay, and interest on money which they were compelled to borrow for the same reason were not objectionable for remoteness.—J. B. Carl & Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 41.

Where contractors suffered delay by reason of a carrier's negligence in failing to promptly transport finishing material, lost time of the members of the contracting firm could not be made the proper subject of a recovery of damages.—Id.

(F) Loss of or Injury to Goods.

§ 109 (S.C.) An action against a delivering railroad company for damages for the destruction of goods shipped en route is a common-law action, so that the state law and not the law as declared by the federal courts, would be applicable, though the shipment was an interstate shipment.—Deaver-Jeter Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 709.

§ 132 (S.C.) In an action against a delivering carrier for damages for the destruction of goods en route, the burden was upon defendant to prove that the goods were destroyed by the act of God, and that it had exercised due care to prevent the consequences of such act.—Deaver-Jeter Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 709.

§ 134 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action for loss of freight, plaintiff's evidence was based on hearsay, and persons knowing of a failure to deliver, if any, were not introduced, judgment for plaintiff was error.—Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co. v. Collins, 79 S. E. 946.

(I) Connecting Carriers.

§ 177 (Ga.App.) A shipper of goods in interstate commerce over lines of several carriers can bring suit, under Civ. Code 1910, § 2752, against the last carrier who received the goods as in good order, for damages from their loss or damage thereto.—Thomasville Live Stock Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 162.

§ 177 (N.C.) Where an initial carrier, under an oral contract, agreed to transport goods to destination over the lines of connecting carriers to be selected by it, it was liable as an insurer for damages to the goods resulting on any part of the route.—McConnell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 79 S. E. 974.

At common law, carriers are not bound to carry except on their own line, but by special contract to transport the goods to destination over the lines of connecting carriers they may subject themselves to liability over the whole course of transit.—Id.

III. CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK.

§ 228 (N.C.) No receipt or bill of lading is necessary to establish a contract for the carriage of live stock, but such a contract may be shown by the fact that the carrier received the stock for shipment and was paid therefor.—Smith v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 433.

The classification of the Interstate Commerce Commission based upon a valuation clause in a bill of lading for a stock shipment is inadmissible in an action for damages to stock, where there was not in evidence a bill of lading containing a valuation clause.—Id.

In an action for damages to a mule during shipment, testimony that the plank in the side of the car where the mule's foot was caught in a crack was split off and that the break was an old one was competent.—Id.

IV. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

(A) Relation Between Carrier and Passenger.

§ 247 (Ga.App.) One who after purchasing a ticket, takes the wrong train by mistake, is a passenger until he has safely alighted therefrom.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 91.

(B) Fares, Tickets, and Special Contracts.

§ 253 (S.C.) Where a carrier sold a mileage contract to plaintiff under schedules imposing no limit on the use of tickets issued in exchange for coupons, it could not, by filing subsequent schedules containing such limitation, alter plaintiff's contract so as to make a ticket issued to him on his mileage coupons subject to such limitation.—Eberle v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 793.

(C) Performance of Contract of Transportation.

§ 264 (Ga.App.) Where a passenger takes the wrong train by mistake, and not by any negligence of the carrier, the latter is not bound to return him to the point where the mistake was made.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 91.

Failure of ticket agent to inform a passenger on which of two nearby tracks his train will come is not a basis of recovery for taking the wrong train, in the absence of a request for information on that subject.—Id.

§ 275 (Ga.App.) In an action by a passenger for damages because of taking a wrong train at the station, where the petition shows that the mistake was due to plaintiff's failure to exercise ordinary care, and not to any negligence of defendant, a demurrer to the petition was properly sustained.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 91.

(D) Personal Injuries.

§ 280 (Ga.App.) Under the provision of the Hepburn Act which permits a railroad company to issue free transportation to employees and their families, where the wife of an employee was injured while traveling on a free pass, she could recover, though the injury did not result from wantonness or willful negligence.—Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 79 S. E. 242.

§ 280 (Ga.App.) The liability of the owner of a passenger elevator to those carried therein is that of a "common carrier," as the term is defined by Civ. Code 1910, § 2712, and the rule of diligence which applies to common carriers of passengers under section 2714, applies to such owners.—Helmly v. Savannah Office Bldg. Co., 79 S. E. 364.

§ 280 (Va.) A railway mail clerk in the discharge of his duties is entitled to the same degree of care for his protection against injury as a passenger.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

§ 281 (Ga.App.) While under Civ. Code 1910, §§ 2717-2719, and Pen. Code 1910, § 539, it is the duty of the carrier, who accepts a sick passenger, to exercise diligence to provide for his safety and comfort, the carrier is not required to place such passenger in a baggage car, even though sick passengers have previously been placed in baggage cars by the carrier's conductors.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Fleming, 79 S. E. 369.

§ 283 (N.C.) A railroad company is responsible for the acts of a conductor who, while collecting tickets and acting within the scope of his authority, addressed insulting remarks to a lady passenger who had failed to purchase a ticket for her child.—Huffman v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 307.

§ 292 (N.C.) Where plaintiff, a street car passenger, had his little finger jerked off by catching a finger ring in a small screw which projected about one-sixteenth of an inch from the bottom of the handhold, at a point 36 inches from the bottom step, held, that the injury was an unavoidable accident, for which the street car company was not responsible.—Pendergrast v. Durham Traction Co., 79 S. E. 84.

§ 303 (Ga.App.) Where a passenger takes the wrong train by mistake, and not by any negligence of the carrier, the latter is liable for injuries from requiring him to disembark at an unsafe place.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 91.

§ 303 (W.Va.) A railroad company should stop its trains at stations a reasonable time to allow passengers to alight with safety.—Guerin v. Pittsburgh, C., O. & St. L. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 739.

A railroad company is liable to a passenger who, without fault, is injured while alighting by the starting and sudden stopping of the train after it had once stopped at a station, but not long enough to allow him to get off.—Id.

§ 315 (Ga.App.) In a street car passenger's action for damages for defendant's negligent failure to protect plaintiff from the abusive language of its motorman, defendant's evidence, showing that the motorman's conduct was fully warranted and justifiable, was properly admitted under a plea of the general issue.—Binder v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 216.

§ 316 (Ga.App.) An injury to a passenger on a passenger elevator raises a presumption of the negligent failure of the owner of the elevator to exercise the ordinary diligence required of him.—Helmly v. Savannah Office Bldg. Co., 79 S. E. 364.

§ 317 (Ga.App.) In a street car passenger's action for damages for defendant's failure to protect him from abusive language of its motorman, evidence that whenever the motorman subsequently saw plaintiff riding on his car he would shake his fists and clench his teeth at plaintiff was properly excluded as irrelevant.—Binder v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 216.

§ 318 (Ga.App.) In an action for injuries to a passenger in alighting from a street car, evidence held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.—Savannah Electric Co. v. Lackens, 79 S. E. 53.

§ 319 (Ga.App.) A carrier, which requires a passenger to disembark at an unsafe place, is not liable for the mental suffering caused by the passenger's mistake in taking the wrong train.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 91.

§ 319 (N.C.) In an action against a railroad company for insulting remarks addressed by a conductor to a lady passenger who had failed to purchase a ticket for her child, the plaintiff is entitled to punitive damages if the conductor maliciously, willfully, and wantonly insulted the plaintiff.—Huffman v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 307.

§ 320 (Ga.App.) Where a train stops short of the station after its name has been called, and a passenger gets off in the darkness and falls into a ditch, whether the railroad company was negligent in not warning the passenger that the station had not been reached, was a question for the jury.—Atkinson v. Kennedy, 79 S. E. 84.

(E) Contributory Negligence of Person Injured.

§ 330 (Ga.App.) Where a street car passenger without provocation uses abusive language toward the motorman and incites him to use like language in return, the company cannot be held liable in damages for failure to protect the passenger from the motorman's abuse.—Binder v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 216.

§ 347 (Ga.App.) Where a train stops short of the station after its name has been called, and a passenger gets off in the darkness and falls into a ditch, whether the passenger was negligent, was a question for the jury.—Atkinson v. Kennedy, 79 S. E. 84.

§ 347 (Va.) In an action for injuries to a mail clerk by the shutting of a defective door, evidence held to require the submission to the jury of the question whether plaintiff would have used a hook to fasten the door open, if one had been supplied.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

§ 348 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence showed that plaintiff's injury was due to a sudden jerk of the street car from which she was alighting, and that the accident could not have been avoided by her after it became operative, failure to instruct that she could not recover if, by ordinary care, she could have avoided the consequences of defendant's negligence was not error.—Savannah Electric Co. v. Lackens, 79 S. E. 53.

§ 348 (Va.) In an action for injuries to a railway mail clerk by the shutting of a defective door, evidence as to his contributory negligence held to require that issue to be clearly and fully submitted to the jury.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

Instructions in such case which require the jury to find the defendant's negligence to have been the sole proximate cause of the injury, and place the burden of proving contributory negligence upon the defendant, do not sufficiently present the issue of contributory negligence.—Id.

(F) Ejection of Passengers and Intruders.

§ 355 (N.C.) A railroad passenger may recover damages for wrongful ejection where he was ejected for not paying his fare after the conductor had accepted and retained his ticket.—Mott v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 867.

§ 359 (Ga.App.) Where a railroad conductor ordered a passenger to stop smoking, but allowed others to smoke in the same car, the passenger might assume that the conductor was discriminating against him on personal grounds, and might recover damages for being ejected from the train upon his refusal to obey the command.—Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Lindsey, 79 S. E. 361.

§ 363 (N.C.) A railroad passenger who is ejected at a place forbidden by statute, 3½ miles from a station and where no one lived on the ground of nonpayment of his fare, may recover damages for wrongful ejection.—Mott v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 867.

§ 381 (N.C.) Evidence, in a railroad's action for damages for his wrongful ejection, held to show that plaintiff was ejected at a place forbidden by statute, and after the conductor had accepted and retained his ticket.—Mott v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 867.

CERTIORARI.

See Appeal and Error, § 1001; Criminal Law, § 1179; Justices of the Peace, §§ 194-209; Municipal Corporations, § 642.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND DETERMINATION.

§ 42 (Ga.App.) Where a petition for certiorari set out the overruling of a motion to dismiss for want of prosecution and of a motion that the case be tried on the merits and a ruling that the case had been settled and an entry made to that effect, held error to dismiss the petition on the ground that it "does not set out any clear and specific assignment of error upon any specific and judicial act of justice, judicial decision, or judgment."—Union Mut. Ass'n v. Cooper, 79 S. E. 220.

§ 54 (Ga.App.) Where both exceptions to the answer to a petition for certiorari and a traverse of the answer are filed in the same case, the court should act on the exceptions before disposing of the traverse.—Chandler v. Baggett, 79 S. E. 179.

Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5196, exceptions to an answer in a petition for certiorari must be in writing, and notice thereof be given to the opposite party before the case is called for hearing.—Id.

Where no notice of the exceptions to the answer to a petition for certiorari is given the opposite party until after the trial upon a traverse of the answer, the exceptions, being too late, should be stricken.—Id.

§ 56 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5200, a traverse to the answer to a petition for certiorari is sufficiently definite when it specifically refers to and denies the controverted portion of the answer, and states that a specified portion of the petition relates the truth as to the point at issue.—Chandler v. Baggett, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 62 (Ga.App.) A final determination of the merits of a certiorari cannot be had until the issue formed upon the traverse to the answer of the inferior tribunal has been correctly adjudicated.—Chandler v. Baggett, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 70 (Ga.App.) Error in striking the traverse to certain paragraphs of the answer to a petition for certiorari held not reviewable, where no exceptions to this ruling were preserved by filing exceptions pendente lite.—Chandler v. Baggett, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 70 (Ga.App.) While a justice of the peace has no authority to direct a verdict, where the evidence shows that the verdict directed was demanded, the judgment in the superior court in refusing to sustain certiorari on the ground that the verdict was directed will not be reversed.—Simmons v. Hawkins, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 70 (Ga.App.) On a writ of error to the dismissal by the superior court of certiorari to a judgment of a justice of the peace, the assignments of error, while not aptly or clearly stated, held sufficient to furnish the necessary information for the Court of Appeals.—Ballard v. Daniel, 79 S. E. 376.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials of Transfers of Chattels as Security.

§ 6 (Ga.App.) A paper stipulating that the maker conveys certain personalty to secure a debt, and that upon payment of the debt the creditor will reconvey, is a bill of sale to secure a debt and not a mortgage.—Owens v. Bridges, 79 S. E. 225.

(B) Form and Contents of Instruments.

§ 43 (Ga.App.) A purchase price note given for fertilizer, which stipulated that crops on lands fertilized with the fertilizer should be held "in trust" for payment of the note, held to create a mortgage upon the crops mentioned; the words "in trust" being equivalent to the term "mortgage."—Hillis v. E. T. Comer & Co., 79 S. E. 930.

§ 48 (Ga.App.) A chattel mortgage on "all cotton and corn grown during the current season on lands fertilized with the fertilizer," to secure payment for which the mortgage was given, held not void for uncertainty.—Hillis v. E. T. Comer & Co., 79 S. E. 930.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(D) Lien and Priority.

§ 138 (Ga.App.) Under Acts 1899, p. 78, the lien of a mortgage on a crop to secure payment for moneys or supplies furnished, to make and gather such crop, is superior to the lien of a mortgage thereon not given for that purpose, though recorded first.—J. G. & G. W. Durden v. Aycock Bros., 79 S. E. 213.

The purpose of Acts 1899, p. 78, was to give a preference to the mortgage creditor to furnish supplies for making crop, so as to enable insolvents, otherwise unable to obtain credit, to pursue their ordinary vocation of farming, instead of being forced to become vagrants.—Id.

The word "judgment," as used in Civ. Code 1910, § 3340, providing that liens of mortgages on crops shall be superior to older judgments, so far as applicable to proceedings by rule to distribute funds in custodia legis, includes any final process under which property was brought to sale, or could have been legally sold.—Id.

§ 138 (N.C.) Where a tenant mortgaged his cotton crop to plaintiff to secure advances, subject to the landlord's lien, the landlord's release of his lien on one bale of cotton, to enable the tenant to buy a horse from defendants, did not impair plaintiff's mortgage, which thereupon became a first lien on such bale.—M. H. White & Co. v. Winslow & White, 79 S. E. 261.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

§ 172 (S.C.) In a chattel mortgagee's action to recover possession of property which he sold the mortgagors, for the purpose of foreclosing, the mortgagors could set up a counterclaim for damages from false representations by the mortgagee concerning the property, and for breach of warranty.—Hoover v. Thames, 79 S. E. 786.

§ 176 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff, after taking a bill of sale to secure a debt, brought suit and elected to take a money verdict, he could not recover more than the principal and interest of his debt, less any sum paid, though the value of the property covered by the bill of sale exceeded such amount.—Owens v. Bridges, 79 S. E. 225.

VII. PAYMENT OR PERFORMANCE OF CONDITION, RELEASE, AND SATISFACTION.

§ 235 (Ga.App.) Where a bill of sale is given to secure a debt, a reconveyance can be compelled upon payment of the debt, but until this is done the instrument remains operative as a bill of sale even though the debt is paid.—Owens v. Bridges, 79 S. E. 225.

IX. FORECLOSURE.

§ 271 (Ga.App.) A copy of a chattel mortgage held not sufficiently verified as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 3286, where the certificate signed by the mortgagee's attorney and the attesting officer recited merely, "I hereby certify on oath that the above is a true copy of the original mortgage which is now in my possession;" it not showing that any oath was administered.—Hillis v. E. T. Comer & Co., 79 S. E. 930.

§ 278 (Ga.App.) In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage on crops upon which the fertilizer bought should be used, the burden was on plaintiff to show that the fertilizer was used upon the crops claimed to be subject to the mortgage, and in the absence of such evidence it was error to direct a verdict for plaintiff.—Hillis v. E. T. Comer & Co., 79 S. E. 930.

§ 283 (Ga.) Where the affidavit of illegality interposed to the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage did not aver that no order was granted authorizing sale by the sheriff under authority of Civ. Code 1910, § 3301, and, though alleging the order to be illegal, stated no reason therefor, and was vague, indefinite, and consisted almost entirely of conclusions, it was demurrable.—Armistead v. Weaver, 79 S. E. 783.

§ 285 (Ga.) Under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 3301, where defendant interposes an affidavit of illegality to the statutory foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, but fails to replevin the property, such property may be sold by special order as may property which is perishable or expensive to keep.—Armistead v. Weaver, 79 S. E. 783.

I. POWER TO REGULATE IN GENERAL.

§ 3 (S.C.) The authority of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce is supreme and unlimited, except by the federal Constitution, and when Congress legislates upon any particular subject of such commerce, all conflicting state laws, whether statute or common law, affecting the same subject are thereby superseded; but, in the absence of such legislation, the police power of the state remains unimpaired.—Varnville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

§ 8 (Ga.) The federal Employers' Liability Act supersedes the state legislation on the same subject.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemp, 79 S. E. 558.

§ 8 (S.C.) The Carmack Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act, imposing a liability for damage to a shipment upon the initial carrier, does not deprive a shipper of his right to recover the penalty against the terminal carter given him by Act Feb. 15, 1910 (26 St. at Large, p. 717, Civ. Code 1912, § 2572).—Du Pre v. Columbia, N. & L. R. Co., 79 S. E. 810.

§ 8 (S.C.) Penalties incurred under Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, prior to the enactment of the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law, are recoverable from carriers even if that action is superseded and annulled by such amendment.—Varnville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, prescribing a penalty or the failure of carriers to adjust claims promptly, held not inconsistent with, or superadded by, the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law, and hence to be valid as applied to interstate commerce.—Id.

Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, and the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law held not inconsistent as to the carrier against which claims for loss or damage to property shall be brought, the Carmack amendment not requiring them to be brought against the initial carrier, and section 2573 not requiring them to be brought against the terminal carrier.—Id.

Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce law held to continue all rights and remedies for the redress of some specific wrong or injury, whether given by that act, by state statute, or by the common law, not inconsistent with the rules and regulations prescribed by that act.—Id.

§ 8 (S.C.) The courts of this state are not deprived of jurisdiction of an action against a delivering carrier for damages for loss of goods on the ground that the shipment was interstate, and that under the Carmack amendment to the interstate commerce act only the initial carrier is liable; it being a resident of another state and liable there for the loss.—Deaver-Jeter Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 709.

§ 10 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, imposing penalty for the failure of carriers to adjust claims for overcharges of freight, or injuries to property, promptly, held valid in the absence of action by Congress covering the same subject.—Varnville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

II. SUBJECTS OF REGULATION.

§ 27 (Ga.) A section foreman of a railroad company operating a line which traversed several states, and who was injured owing to negligence in the operation of a freight train engaged in interstate commerce, was entitled to recover under the federal Employers' Liability act of April 22, 1908.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemp, 79 S. E. 558.

III. MEANS AND METHODS OF REGULATION.

§ 61 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, imposing penalty for the failure of carriers to adjust claims for overcharges of freight, or injuries to property, promptly, held not to unlawfully regulate or unreasonably burden interstate commerce.—Varnville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

I. ESTABLISHMENT AND AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTIONS.

§ 9 (Ga.) The election for members of Congress and presidential electors, required to be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, is a "general election" within Const. art. 13, § 1, par. 1, providing for the submission of a proposed amendment to the constitution at the next general election.—Moore v. Smith, 79 S. E. 1116.

Const. art. 11, § 1, par. 2, limiting the number of counties, may be amended by a proposal to create an additional county without an amendment for enlarging the number of counties having been previously submitted.—Id.

II. CONSTRUCTION, OPERATION, AND ENFORCEMENT OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

§ 46 (Ga.App.) The question as to whether a statute is unconstitutional will not be certified to the Supreme Court, where the issues involved can be determined without a decision of that question.—Cosper v. State, 79 S. E. 94.

III. DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS.*(A) Legislative Powers and Delegation Thereof.

§ 60 (W.Va.) Code 1906, c. 12, § 7, authorizing either house of the Legislature or a committee thereof to enforce obedience to its process, is not an unconstitutional delegation of power.—Sullivan v. Hill, 79 S. E. 670.

§ 63 (S.C.) Act Feb. 19, 1913 (28 St. at Large, p. 355), amending Act Jan. 25, 1905 (21 St. at Large, p. 921), enlarging the Anderson school district, and authorizing trustees thereof to hold election on the question of issuing $100,000 in bonds, and providing that, in the event of failure of the voters to authorize the issuance of bonds, the trustees may suspend the amendment and operate under the original act, does not confer legislative power upon the trustees.—Burriss v. Brock, 79 S. E. 196.

(B) Judicial Powers and Functions.

§ 70 (N.C.) The Supreme Court cannot make the law, but can only construe statutes as they are enacted.—Powell v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 872.

§ 70 (W.Va.) The Supreme Court of Appeals must apply legislative enactments as it finds them, though their policy or effect may be subject to sound criticism.—Collins v. Board of Trustees of Davis and Elkins College, 79 S. E. 10.

VII. OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.*(B) Contracts of States and Municipalities.

§ 126 (S.C.) Under Const. 1868, art. 12, § 1, Const. 1895, art. 9, §§ 2, 8, and Civ. Code 1912, § 3812, making corporations liable for a penalty of $5 a day for failure to pay wages due a discharged laborer within 24 hours after demand, though the wages are not payable until a specified date thereafter, held sustainable as an alteration of corporate charter of defendant railroad company.—Wynne v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 521.

VIII. RETROSPECTIVE AND EX POST FACTO LAWS.

§ 203 (S.C.) Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 702), changing the manner of inflicting the death penalty from hanging to electrocution, is not ex post facto as applied to one who committed a crime punishable by death prior to the enactment of that law.—State v. Vaughn, 79 S. E. 312.

IX. PRIVILEGES OR IMMUNITIES, AND CLASS LEGISLATION.

§ 206 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 2563, allowing a suit against an insurance company to be brought in the county where the company had an office when the policy was issued, although not at the time of suit, is not unconstitutional, as abridging the privileges of citizens of the United States.—Jefferson Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brackin, 79 S. E. 467.

X. EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS.

§ 238 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 3812, requiring corporations to pay wages to discharged employees within 24 hours after demand, held a proper exercise of the police power, and hence not unconstitutional as denying them equal protection of the laws.—Wynne v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 521.

§ 247 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, providing a penalty for carrier's failure to promptly adjust claims, held not to deny carriers the equal protection of the laws.—Varnville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

§ 249 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 2563, allowing a suit against an insurance company to be brought in the county where the company had an office when the policy was issued, although not at time of suit, is not unconstitutional as denying the equal protection of the laws.—Jefferson Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brackin, 79 S. E. 467.

XI. DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

§ 251 (W.Va.) "Due process," as used in the state and federal Constitution, does not necessarily mean process of the court, but means in due course of legal proceeding according to those rules and forms established for the protection of private rights securing to every person a judicial trial before he can be deprived of life, liberty, or property.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 3.

§ 273 (W.Va.) Code 1906, c. 12, § 7, authorizing either house of the Legislature or a committee thereof to enforce obedience to its process, held not a denial of due process of law.—Sullivan v. Hill, 79 S. E. 670.

§ 275 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 3812, requiring corporations to pay wages to discharged employees within 24 hours after demand, held a proper exercise of the police power, and hence not unconstitutional as depriving corporations of their property without due process of law.—Wynne v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 521.

§ 276 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 3812, requiring corporations to pay wages to discharged employees within 24 hours after demand, held a proper exercise of the police power, and hence not unconstitutional as depriving corporations of their property by depriving them of liberty of contract.—Wynne v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 521.

§ 278 (Va.) Where real property was given to a hospital in trust to provide extra comforts for patients therein, acts of the General Assembly approved February 20, 1906 (Laws 1906, c. 48), and March 12, 1908 (Laws 1908, c. 195), providing for a sale of the land and a diversion of the proceeds to other uses, were unconstitutional and void as a deprivation of property in the trust fund without due process of law.—General Board of State Hospitals for the Insane v. Robertson, 79 S. E. 1064.

§ 281 (W.Va.) Acts 1907, c. 74 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 42, §§ 18, 20), amending and re-enacting Code 1906, c. 42, §§ 18, 20, and providing for an alternative method of condemning land or easements by pipe line companies, held not violative of the due process of law provisions of Const. art. 3, § 10 (Code 1906, p. 11), and Const. U. S. Amend. 14.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 8.

§ 303 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 2573, providing a penalty for carrier's failure to promptly adjust claims, held not to deprive carriers of their property without due process of law.—Varville Furniture Co. v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 700.

§ 305 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 2563, allowing a suit against an insurance company to be brought in the county where the company had an office when the policy was issued, although not at the time of suit, is not unconstitutional as depriving the company of its property without due process of law.—Jefferson Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brackin, 79 S. E. 467.

§ 306 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 1187, authorizing the Comptroller General to issue execution against tax collectors and their sureties on their bonds on a failure to settle their accounts according to law, is violative of the due process clause of the Constitution (Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 3; Civ. Code 1910, § 6359), in that there is no provision for notice or hearing to the tax collector or his surety.—Gaulden v. Wright, 79 S. E. 1125.

§ 309 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 2564, providing that service may be had upon an insurance company which had ceased to do business in the county where the policy was written by leaving a copy of the petition at its former office, violates the due process of law clause of the Constitution, which requires notice of procedure.—Jefferson Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brackin, 79 S. E. 467.

II. POWER TO PUNISH, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREFOR.

§ 63 (W.Va.) Conditional judgments of imprisonment may be rendered in contempt cases.—State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 79 S. E. 834.

§ 66 (Ga.App.) Where a person adjudged guilty of contempt pays a fine to avoid an alternative sentence of imprisonment, he waives his right to a writ of error.—In re Hartsfield, 79 S. E. 225.

§ 66 (W.Va.) Under Code 1906, c. 160, § 4, a writ of error will not lie to review judgments in contempt cases, where the trial court acted within its jurisdiction in entering the violated order.—State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 79 S. E. 834.

A writ of error will lie to review a contempt judgment, where the trial court acted outside its jurisdiction in entering the violated order.—Id.

CONTINUANCE.

See Criminal Law, §§ 594, 603, 1151; Husband and Wife, § 25; New Trial, § 156.

§ 46 (Ga.App.) A motion for continuance for surprise is defective, unless the court is advised in the showing wherein and in what respect the movant is not prepared, and how or why he will be better prepared to meet the issue in the event that a continuance is granted.—Hyer v. C. E. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 53.

§ 46 (Ga.App.) It was not error to overrule a motion for continuance because of defendant's absence, due to alleged sickness, where the motion was supported only by the unsworn statement of an alleged physician, and there was no evidence that the certificate was made by a physician, especially where no meritorious defense was set up.—Franklin v. Ford, 79 S. E. 366.

§ 47 (Ga.App.) Proof that defendant was a married woman, who was not separated from her husband, was, without more, insufficient to disprove her showing for a continuance, that she had no one by whom she could send a physician's certificate or notify her counsel that she was physically unable to attend court.—Wright v. Bank of Southwestern Georgia, 79 S. E. 184.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials in General.

§ 9 (Ga.) An oral agreement, made on the mutual rescission of a contract of sale and trade, that defendant would give plaintiff "part of the money" which he had paid, held too vague to be enforced.—Burney v. Jones, 79 S. E. 840.

§ 10 (Ga.) An oral contract between two persons to buy land whereby one was to pay therefor from a loan to be secured by him on the security of land owned by him and the purchased tract, and was to take title in his own name and convey to the other a half interest when he was reimbursed from the rents and profits of the purchased tract, held void for want of mutuality.—Hall v. Edwards, 79 S. E. 852.

§ 10 (Ga.App.) An agreement to purchase shares of stock one year from date at a price to be mutually agreed upon, with a provision that if the seller desires to sell he should give the purchaser 30 days' notice of his intention to sell, is unilateral; the seller not being bound to sell and making no promise whatsoever.—Martin v. Cox, 79 S. E. 39.

§ 10 (N.C.) That letters of the seller evidencing a contract of sale do not bind the purchaser to pay does not make the contract unilateral, where the letters are merely in confirmation of an agreement for the sale.—Holt v. Wellons, 79 S. E. 450.

§ 10 (W.Va.) When a proposal to perform labor is certain, definite, and unconditional, and there is a like acceptance, there is no lack of mutuality.—McGuire v. Old Sweet Springs Co., 79 S. E. 350.

(B) Validity of Assent.

§ 94 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4254, providing that fraud voids all contracts, the law is liberal in relieving from the consequences of fraud shown.—Harrison v. Lee, 79 S. E. 211.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) General Rules of Construction.

§ 147 (W.Va.) Where a contract is made for the accomplishment of one main purpose, every provision of the contract must be read in the light of such purpose, and the whole instrument considered in its entirety.—Taylor v. Buffalo Collieries Co., 79 S. E. 27.

In construing a contract, the court will regard the obvious intent of the parties and the object sought, as well as the language used.—Id.

§ 156 (W.Va.) Where a particular purpose is sought by a contract and the language pertaining thereto is clear and certain, no general terms used therein will extend the meaning beyond that definitely expressed.—Taylor v. Buffalo Collieries Co., 79 S. E. 27.

§ 170 (W.Va.) An ambiguous written contract should be construed in the light of the practical construction put upon it by the parties.—Lovett v. West Virginia Central Gas Co., 79 S. E. 1007.

(D) Place and Time.

§ 214 (W.Va.) An oral contract for continuous services will be construed to postpone the time of payment therefor until the promisor's death, or provision made therefor in his will, where the peculiar circumstances of the parties, their confidential relations, and the promisor's declarations clearly indicate that such was the understanding of the parties, though the contract does not expressly provide for such postponement.—Hotsinpiller v. Hotsinpiller, 79 S. E. 936.

VI. ACTIONS FOR BREACH.

§ 324 (W.Va.) A bill will not lie to recover compensation or damages for breach of contract.—Swarthmore Lumber Co. v. Parks, 79 S. E. 723.

§ 340 (Ga.App.) In an action on a contract providing for the transfer of an option, and containing an ambiguous provision that the transferee should pay the transferor 2½ per cent. of the purchase price of the land "for services previously rendered to this date," it was error to strike from defendant's answer a plea that no services were rendered by plaintiff, and that therefore the promise to pay was without consideration.—Witt v. Baker, 79 S. E. 243.

§ 353 (Ga.App.) In an action based upon an entire contract, it is not error for the court to confine the consideration of the jury to a recovery for the plaintiff of the full amount of the contract price.—Jarrard v. Hawes, 79 S. E. 373.

CONVICTS.

§ 10 (S.C.) Work of a county chain gang in laying the substructure of a street in advance of employes of contractors laying the superstructure held a violation of Civ. Code 1912, § 957, providing that the chain gang shall not be worked in "connection" with any road contractor or overseer.—State v. Patterson, 79 S. E. 306.

IV. CAPITAL, STOCK, AND DIVIDENDS.

(B) Subscription to Stock.

§ 90 (Ga.) In a receiver's action on a stock subscription, a receipt reciting that defendant had subscribed for 20 shares, which number was less than that shown by the subscription list, held properly admitted in evidence.—Hardee v. Tietjen, 79 S. E. 117.

Under conflicting evidence in a receiver's action on a stock subscription, the question whether defendant knew that the subscription was for 50 shares, and not for only 20, was for the jury.—Id.

That the treasurer of a corporation knows that the subscription list shows 50 shares subscribed for by the president of the corporation, and not merely 20 shares, as he believes, is not notice to him that his stock subscription has been raised to the higher amount.—Id.

§ 90 (Ga.App.) In a corporation's action on a written stock subscription, the burden is on defendant to prove a payment relied on.—Justice v. Chattooga Oil Mill Co., 79 S. E. 223.

Where, in a corporation's action on an unconditional written stock subscription, the execution of the subscription was proved and it was introduced in evidence and no plea of payment or other defense was made, a verdict was properly directed for plaintiff.—Id.

V. MEMBERS AND STOCKHOLDERS.*(A) Rights and Liabilities as to Corporation.

§ 180 (Ga.App.) By the acceptance of a corporation's charter, the shareholders engage not to exceed the powers conferred upon them by law, and each shareholder agrees not to divert the assets to a purpose foreign to the objects of the corporation.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

(D) Liability for Corporate Debts and Acts.

§ 228 (Ga.) One who subscribes for stock in a corporation under a contract providing for special terms and conditions of payment, which constitute a legal fraud upon other stockholders or creditors, is liable to the creditors, after the insolvency of the corporation, for the unpaid balance due on his subscription, irrespective of the conditions.—Spratling v. Westbrook, 79 S. E. 536.

§ 265 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 2261, permitting suits against all or any one of the members of the corporation for debts for which they are liable, a trustee in bankruptcy of an insolvent corporation may sue in one action all the stockholders whose stock subscriptions are unpaid for the balance due on such subscriptions.—Spratling v. Westbrook, 79 S. E. 536.

VI. OFFICERS AND AGENTS.*(A) Election or Appointment, Qualification, and Tenure.

§ 284 (S.C.) Where plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to the position of superintendent and general manager of defendant corporation, and that he had been unlawfully deprived of his position by the officers of the company, the burden was on him to show it.—Silverthorne v. Barnwell Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 519.

§ 291 (W.Va.) Code 1906, c. 53, § 53, providing that corporate officers and agents shall hold during the pleasure of the board, does not apply to persons employed for carpenter work.—McGuire v. Old Sweet Springs Co., 79 S. E. 350.

(C) Rights, Duties, and Liabilities as to Corporation and Its Members.

§ 310 (Ga.) Directors of a trading corporation must exercise ordinary care as to its affairs, and, while they may commit the active management to authorized officers, this does not relieve them from the duty of reasonable supervision.—McEwen v. Kelly, 79 S. E. 777.

(D) Liability for Corporate Debts and Acts.

§ 331 (Ga.) Though the directors of a solvent going concern are agents of the corporation rather than of its creditors, creditors may in some instances sue directors on account of losses occurring from their maladministration.—McEwen v. Kelly, 79 S. E. 777.

VII. CORPORATE POWERS AND LIABILITIES.*(A) Extent and Exercise of Powers in General.

§ 370 (Ga.App.) Corporations have no rights or powers other than those expressly conferred by law or the charter or which arise therefrom by necessary implication.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

§ 385 (Ga.App.) An "ultra vires act" of a corporation is one in excess of charter power.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

§ 388 (Ga.App.) A corporation is not estopped to challenge the validity of an executory ultra vires contract where no innocent person has been misled to his injury.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

(B) Representation of Corporation by Officers and Agents.

§ 399 (Ga.App.) That a person is president of a corporation does not authorize him to buy, sell, or contract for it, or to control its property, funds, or management.—Blakely Artesian Ice Co. v. Clarke, 79 S. E. 526.

That the agent of a corporation was specially authorized in some instances to execute a mortgage and a security deed, and in others to borrow money from named persons on specified terms, did not authorize the inference that he had general authority to contract, on behalf of the corporation, to borrow money, or for any other purpose.—Id.

§ 404 (Ga.App.) That the governing authorities of a corporation empower an agent to renew a note payable to a named person does not authorize such agent to pledge corporate property for payment of the note, unless the property was pledged as security in the original evidence of indebtedness.—Blakely Artesian Ice Co. v. Clarke, 79 S. E. 526.

§ 407 (Ga.App.) That the agent of a corporation was vice president and afterwards president of the corporation did not authorize him to appoint other agents to sell corporate stock.—Great Southern Accident & Fidelity Co. v. Guthrie, 79 S. E. 162.

§ 407 (W.Va.) A contract by the general manager of a corporation for carpenter work beyond the term of his own employment is not necessarily void when made with the specific direction of the president of the corporation, or when there is no abuse of the manager's authority and no fraud practiced.—McGuire v. Old Sweet Springs Co., 79 S. E. 350.

A contract by the general manager of a corporation for carpenter work to be done after the term of his own employment, when definite in terms, duly accepted, and the work entered upon, was not void for want of authority.—Id.

§ 426 (Ga.App.) The president of a corporation has no authority by virtue of his office to contract in its behalf; but where he without authority executes a contract, and the corporation retains and uses the consideration, it cannot repudiate the contract.—Ocilla Southern R. Co. v. Morton, 79 S. E. 480.

§ 432 (Ga.) Where a deed purporting on its face to convey land from one corporation to another is signed by the president of the grantor with the corporate seal attached, it will be presumed that such officer was authorized to execute the conveyance.—Augusta Land Co. v. Augusta Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 138.

§ 432 (Ga.App.) An instrument executed in the name of a corporation by its president under its corporate seal is presumed to be executed by its authority, but this presumption is rebuttable.—Blakely Artesian Ice Co. v. Clarke, 79 S. E. 526.

In an action of trover, evidence held insufficient to authorize a finding that the corporation defendant had held out as its agent the person who executed the contract upon which plaintiff relied in proof of his title, in such way as to estop it or its privies from pleading the want of the agent's authority.—Id.

(D) Contracts and Indebtedness.

§ 448 (W.Va.) A corporation does not succeed to the right of action of one of its promoters against his agent for breach of his contract of agency antedating the existence of the corporation, in the absence of an assignment.—Swarthmore Lumber Co. v. Parks, 79 S. E. 723.

§ 467 (Ga.App.) The authority of a corporation to make an accommodation indorsement of commercial paper will not be implied from the power to lend or borrow money on such paper and to generally exercise corporate powers.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

§ 479 (W.Va.) The owner of past-due coupons of corporate bonds secured by mortgage may recover judgment on same where there is nothing in them restricting such right, though the mortgage provides for the trustee to take over the mortgaged property on request of one-third of the bondholders on such default.—Fleming v. Fairmont & M. R. Co., 79 S. E. 826.

The common-law right to sue upon a corporate bond is not affected by the remedies provided in the mortgage given to secure same unless the mortgage expressly or by necessary implication excludes such right.—Id.

Where the mortgage securing corporate bonds provides for a trustee to take over the mortgaged property after default, an execution issued on a judgment obtained on coupons forming part of the bonds is not leviable on property covered by the mortgage.—Id.

§ 480 (S.C.) Where a mortgage executed to one who was secretary of a corporation was on record when the corporation issued bonds secured by mortgage on the same property, such person was not estopped from asserting the validity of the prior mortgage as against the purchasers of the bonds merely because they were executed by him as secretary, and were headed "First Mortgage Bonds" and "Second Mortgage Bonds."—Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Southern Granite Co., 79 S. E. 985.

§ 484 (Ga.App.) A corporation cannot, in the absence of express charter authority, lend its credit for the mere accommodation of third parties.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

§ 487 (Ga.App.) To be entitled to repudiate an executed ultra vires contract, a corporation must restore the benefit received.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

A corporation cannot ratify a contract which it has no legal power to make.—Id.

An executory contract of a corporation wholly beyond its power cannot be enforced by a person who, at the time of contracting, had notice of its illegality, even though ratified by all the stockholders.—Id.

§ 487 (N.C.) Where standing timber was conveyed to a corporation at a reduced price in consideration of its covenant to build a railroad, which it repudiated on the ground that it was ultra vires, the grantor could recover the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the timber.—Herring v. Wallace Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 876.

VIII. INSOLVENCY AND RECEIVERS.

§ 556 (Ga.) Three general creditors, holding small claims against an electric railway company, without lien therefor, held to have no right to a receivership, upon an allegation of the company's insolvency and inability to complete its railway.—Atlanta & C. Ry. Co. v. Carolina Portland Cement Co., 79 S. E. 555.

§ 557 (Ga.) An intervention filed by attorneys, claiming attorney's fees from the defendant railway company, to be paid from proceeds of the sale of bonds issued by the company, or from other property or funds, without any allegation that there were such funds arising from the sale of the bonds, or showing that they had any interest therein, held demurrable, and not to save the original petition from being demurrable.—Atlanta & C. Ry. Co. v. Carolina Portland Cement Co., 79 S. E. 555.

An intervention filed by several individual bondholders in a suit by creditors against an electric railway company for a receiver held demurrable, and not to save the original petition from demurrer, where it showed no reason why they had a right to proceed otherwise than through the trustees, to whom mortgages had been given to secure the bonds in which they claimed an interest.—Id.

In an action by creditors against an electric railway company for a receiver, an answer filed by trustees of the bondholders, who were made parties defendant, held to furnish no reason against the sustaining of a demurrer filed by the corporation to the original petition and intervention.—Id.

§ 557 (W.Va.) Where a bill is filed to wind up corporate affairs and unsecured creditors have not by proper pleading attacked for fraud a lien on the corporate property, they cannot make such an attack before a commissioner to whom the case has been referred to ascertain and report the debts and their priorities.—McDonald v. McDonald Planing Mill Co., 79 S. E. 1081.

§ 559 (W.Va.) Where creditors of an insolvent corporation suffered to be taken for confessed a bill which was filed against them and the corporation by its stockholders which averred that a deed of trust upon the corporate property created a lien thereon in favor of a certain creditor, they thereby admitted the validity of such lien.—McDonald v. McDonald Planing Mill Co., 79 S. E. 1081.

XI. DISSOLUTION AND FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE.

§ 603 (Ga.App.) Though one corporation may own all the stock in another, the two do not become merged but remain distinct legal entities.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

CORRECTION.

See Taxation, § 466.

COSTS.

See Criminal Law, § 982; Judgment, § 167; Partition, § 114.

I. NATURE, GROUNDS, AND EXTENT OF RIGHT IN GENERAL.

§ 41 (Ga.App.) A letter stating that plaintiff would institute suit in a certain court, if the claim was not paid by a certain day, held sufficient notice to bind defendant for attorney's fees, when timely received by defendant.—Cook v. Hightower & Co., 79 S. E. 185.

§ 42 (N.C.) A plea of tender was insufficient to stop costs where the tender was not kept good and defendant did not produce the money and pay it into court.—Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Davenport, 79 S. E. 602.

Revisal 1905, § 860, authorizing a written offer to allow judgment, held inapplicable to an attempted tender by check which was not kept good by a continued readiness to pay and payment of the money into court.—Id.

III. PERSONS, PROPERTY, AND FUNDS LIABLE.

§ 96 (Va.) The trustees of a state hospital and the general board of the state hospital for the insane, who are public officers of the state represented by the Attorney General, having no personal interest in a suit to protect the beneficial rights of a patient in a trust fund held by the hospital held not liable to costs where an adverse judgment was rendered against them.—General Board of State Hospitals for the Insane v. Robertson, 79 S. E. 1064.

VII. ON APPEAL OR ERROR, AND ON NEW TRIAL OR MOTION THEREFOR.

§ 238 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action against the principal and sureties on a bond, all defendants prosecuted one writ of error, the costs of a second and unnecessary writ, which was a mere duplicate, were taxable against the plaintiffs in error, though they prevailed in part.—Blackburn v. Morel, 79 S. E. 492.

§ 21½ (N.C.) Counties have only such powers and capacities as have been conferred upon them by law.—Board of Com'rs of Vance County v. Town of Henderson, 79 S. E. 442.

III. PROPERTY, CONTRACTS, AND LIABILITIES.*(C) County Expenses and Charges and Statutory Liabilities.

§ 132 (N.C.) Revisal 1905, § 3152, imposing on counties expenses of post mortem examinations in homicide cases, held a valid exercise of the state's police power.—Withers v. Board of Com'rs of Columbus County, 79 S. E. 615.

§ 139 (N.C.) Expense of chemical analysis of stomach of a person believed to have been poisoned held a necessary county expense, within Const. art. 7, § 7, and hence the judge of the superior court could order its payment by the county, especially in view of Revisal 1905, § 3152.—Withers v. Board of Com'rs of Columbus County, 79 S. E. 615.

An order in a homicide case, requiring the county to pay expense of a chemical analysis of deceased's stomach, held not void because the Board of Commissioners were not parties to the action, and were not given notice before the order was made.—Id.

V. CLAIMS AGAINST COUNTY.

§ 205 (Va.) While under Code 1904, §§ 838, 843, and 844, the manner of suing a county is by "appeal" from the action of the board of supervisors upon presentation of the claim, the determination of the board is not an adjudication of the case, and the court to which the "appeal" is taken is not an appellate court in the sense that a plea of offset cannot be filed therein.—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

§ 206 (Va.) The allowance of a claim against a county by the board of supervisors is not an adjudication of the claim, and does not estop the county from setting up a defense to the claim when subsequently sued upon it.—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

II. ESTABLISHMENT, ORGANIZATION, AND PROCEDURE IN GENERAL.*(D) Rules of Decision, Adjudications, Opinions, and Records.

§ 89 (Ga.) Decisions which have stood for a long time will not be overruled.—Echols v. Green, 79 S. E. 567.

§ 90 (Ga.) Where, under Civ. Code 1910, § 6207, decisions were concurred in by the entire bench, concurrence of all the judges is necessary to reverse them.—Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Glawson, 79 S. E. 136.

§ 97 (N.C.) In construing a federal statute the state Supreme Court is bound by any construction placed thereon by the Supreme Court of the United States.—Dooley v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 970.

§ 102 (S.C.) Under Const. 1895, art. 5, §§ 2, 6, 12, the Supreme Court has power to decide a case, though there is a vacancy thereon, though its decision can be only an affirmance; there being but two judges for reversal.—McAulay v. McAulay, 79 S. E. 785.

§ 107 (S.C.) In construing a judicial opinion the language must always be read and considered in the light of the facts in the case under consideration.—City of Anderson v. Fant, 79 S. E. 641.

§ 116 (Va.) Process to commence a suit is part of the record for the purpose of amendment, and the court will look to the return thereon when necessary, not only to show the date of the return, but also the date of its execution.—House v. Universal Crusher Corporation, 79 S. E. 1049.

IV. COURTS OF LIMITED OR INFERIOR JURISDICTION.

§ 163 (Ga.App.) Under the constitutional provision (Civ. Code 1910, § 6510) vesting exclusive jurisdiction in superior courts to try cases respecting title to land, any other court should hesitate to entertain jurisdiction to abate a nuisance, where the only substantial issue is one respecting title to realty.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

Cases where the title to land is only incidentally involved are not "cases respecting title to land," within the constitutional provision (Civ. Code 1910, § 6510).—Id.

§ 188 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5521, a city court cannot entertain a plea attempting to set off a claim arising ex delicto against a suit arising ex contractu.—Drake v. Lewis, 79 S. E. 167.

§ 188 (Ga.App.) While a city court is without jurisdiction to afford a plaintiff affirmative equitable relief, it may entertain an equitable defense which will prevent plaintiff from recovering.—Birmingham Fertilizer Co. v. Dozier, 79 S. E. 927.

§ 189 (Ga.App.) In an action of trover in the city court of Nashville, an amendment changing the action to one seeking equitable relief is not permissible, since such court is without equitable jurisdiction.—Gaskins v. Gaskins, 79 S. E. 483.

VIII. CONCURRENT AND CONFLICTING JURISDICTION, AND COMITY.*(B) State Courts and United States Courts.

§ 489 (N.C.) In view of Act March 3, 1887, § 3, permitting actions in the state courts against receivers appointed by the federal court without obtaining the consent of the federal court, a provision in the decree confirming a sale by the receivers that the federal court retains exclusive jurisdiction to enforce the liability of the grantees for debts incurred by the receivers, and which the purchasers assumed, does not deprive the state court of jurisdiction over an action for the negligence of the receivers' employes.—Lassiter v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 284.

§ 489 (S.C.) As the common-law remedies are preserved by Interstate Commerce Act, § 22, the state courts have jurisdiction of an action by a shipper for damages suffered by an interstate carrier's refusal to carry goods at the rate approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.—Aldrich v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 316.

COVENANTS.

See Deeds, § 45; Evidence, § 441; Landlord and Tenant, § 124; Logs and Logging, § 3; Railroads, § 72; Specific Performance, § 123; Telegraphs and Telephones, § 18; Vendor and Purchaser, § 197.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Express Covenants.

§ 7 (N.C.) The grantee in a deed poll, containing covenants and stipulations purporting to bind him, becomes bound for their performance, though he does not execute the deed.—Herring v. Wallace Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 876.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) Covenants in General.

§ 31 (Ga.App.) A "personal covenant" is one which has no relation to the land conveyed.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

(B) Covenants Running with the Land.

§ 57 (Ga.App.) To constitute a "covenant running with the land," the covenant must have a relation to the interest in the land conveyed, and the act to be done must concern such interest; but it is not necessary that privity of the estate should exist between the original grantor and a purchaser from the covenantee.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

§ 69 (Ga.App.) A grantee, by accepting a deed obligating it to construct a railroad and build a side track and warehouse, entered into a covenant to comply with such obligation, which covenant ran with the land, and became obligatory upon its assignee.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

IV. ACTIONS FOR BREACH.

§ 114 (Ga.App.) The petition in an action for breach of covenants in a deed held not demurrable on the ground that it set out covenants, conditions, and agreements different from those in the attached deed.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

§ 119 (Ga.App.) In a suit against a grantee and its assignee for breach of a covenant running with the land and requiring the location of a railroad station at a certain point, a deed executed by the grantee to its assignee subsequently to the filing of the suit held properly admitted in evidence, where, before the commencement of the suit, the assignee was in possession and control of the property.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

§ 134 (Ga.App.) Under conflicting evidence in an action for breach of a railroad company's covenant to construct a side track and erect a warehouse, the questions whether a spur track was a side track, and whether the placing of a box car near the spur track after the commencement of the suit was the construction of a warehouse within the covenant, held for the jury.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

§ 135 (Ga.App.) Under the evidence in an action for breach of a railroad company's covenant to construct a side track and erect a warehouse at a certain point, an instruction on the liability of a defendant company, which had taken over the property pursuant to a contract of consolidation with the defendant covenantor, held not erroneous.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

I. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF CRIME AND DEFENSES IN GENERAL.

§ 13 (N.C.) The Constitution not having defined petty misdemeanors, it was competent for the Legislature to define the offenses which should be so classified, provided the punishment prescribed therefor was not that prescribed for felonies.—State v. Hyman, 79 S. E. 284.

§ 20 (Ga.App.) A criminal intent is an essential ingredient of a crime.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 94.

§ 27 (N.C.) That the Legislature calls an offense a petty misdemeanor does not make it so, when the punishment prescribed makes it a felony.—State v. Hyman, 79 S. E. 284.

III. PARTIES TO OFFENSES.

§ 59 (Ga.App.) Where two or more parties, either with or without a common cause or quarrel, act with a common intent, and jointly commit an unlawful act, each is chargeable with criminal responsibility for the acts of all the others.—Pope v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

§ 67 (Ga.App.) A "principal in the second degree" is a person who is present, aiding and abetting the act to be done.—Pope v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

IV. JURISDICTION.

§ 88 (Ga.App.) A defendant, charged with violating Acts 1907, p. 121 (codified in Civ. Code 1910, §§ 1661, 1662; Pen. Code 1910, § 459), as to the sale of narcotic drugs, can be prosecuted in a city court having jurisdiction of misdemeanors, by accusation filed therein, as well as by indictment transferred thereto from the superior court.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 908.

§ 90 (N.C.) Perjury, being punishable by imprisonment in the state's prison under Revisal 1905, § 3615, is a felony, and therefore not within the jurisdiction of the Edgecombe recorder's court, under Pub. Loc. Laws 1911, c. 472, giving it jurisdiction of offenses below the grade of felony, declared petty misdemeanors.—State v. Hyman, 79 S. E. 284.

§ 101 (W.Va.) That the clerk of the criminal court prematurely certified a murder case to the circuit court did not deprive the circuit court of jurisdiction, where Acts 1911, c. 12, § 2, abolishing such criminal court, had operated to effect such transfer and give the circuit court jurisdiction at the time of trial.—State v. Edwards, 79 S. E. 1005.

V. VENUE.

(B) Change of Venue.

§ 130 (Ga.) A petition for a change of venue held to be based solely upon the ground that an impartial jury could not be obtained in the county in which the crime was alleged to have been committed.—Coleman v. George, 79 S. E. 543.

VII. FORMER JEOPARDY.

§ 178 (Ga.App.) Until the jurors have been impeached and sworn, a case is not "submitted" to the jury, within Pen. Code 1910, § 982, authorizing the entry of a nolle prosequi at any time before submission.—Fortson v. State, 79 S. E. 746.

A nolle prosequi may be entered under Pen. Code, § 982, where the jurors have not been sworn, though they have been stricken and have taken their seats in the jury box.—Id.

IX. ARRAIGNMENT AND PLEAS, AND NOLLE PROSEQUI OR DISCONTINUANCE.

§ 269 (Ga.App.) At common law a personal plea was necessary on arraignment in a criminal case, but under Pen. Code 1910, § 971, the plea of defendant may be made by his attorney, and where accused interposes no objection to such plea he is bound thereby.—Bearden v. State, 79 S. E. 79.

§ 274 (Ga.App.) A plea of guilty may be withdrawn as a matter of right before sentence, and after sentence on meritorious grounds in the discretion of the trial court.—Bearden v. State, 79 S. E. 79.

§ 278 (Ga.App.) All objections affecting the incompetency of a grand juror, other than such as disqualify him to serve in any case, must be taken by challenge, and not by plea in abatement.—Barlow v. State, 79 S. E. 93.

It is not good ground for plea in abatement to an indictment for murder that a member of the grand jury was a nephew of the deceased.—Id.

§ 281 (Va.) Where a plea in abatement is filed to an indictment, the commonwealth may demur or reply, but it cannot do both.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

§ 382 (Va.) The commonwealth may demur or reply to a plea in abatement, but it cannot do both.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

X. EVIDENCE.

(A) Judicial Notice, Presumptions, and Burden of Proof.

§ 304 (Ga.App.) The Court of Appeals will take judicial notice that the Georgia Southern & Florida Railway Company is a corporation chartered under the laws of Georgia.—Trueheart v. State, 79 S. E. 755.

§ 308 (Ga.App.) The term "presumption of innocence" is not synonymous with that of "reasonable doubt"; the presumption referring to a substantive right in the nature of evidence, and the phrase "reasonable doubt" applying to the degree of proof necessary to produce mental conviction.—Butts v. State, 79 S. E. 87.

§ 308 (Ga.App.) Where an act is equally subject to two constructions, the one indicative of guilt, the other consistent with innocence, the latter must be adopted.—Johnson v. State, 79 S. E. 524.

§ 317 (N.C.) Failure of accused to testify in a criminal case should not be used against him, and should not be considered to his prejudice.—State v. Smith, 79 S. E. 979.

§ 325 (Ga.App.) The presumption that every man knows the law will be subordinated to the presumption of innocence in the case of one prosecuted for an offense growing out of matters of civil contract, such as a trespass on land, and the question of intent and knowledge will be left to the consideration of the jury.—Hayes v. State, 79 S. E. 761.

§ 335 (Ga.App.) Where accused was charged with defrauding a certain corporation, and the offense was committed more than two years before the accusation, and it was alleged that it was unknown to the corporation until within the two years, the burden was on the state to show such fact.—Williams v. State, 79 S. E. 207.

Where, to relieve an accusation from the bar of limitations, an exception to the statute is alleged, the burden is on the state to prove it.—Id.

(C) Other Offenses, and Character of Accused.

§ 369 (Ga.App.) Testimony of the justice of the peace, who issued the warrant upon which an accusation was based, that he had information that accused had been convicted before, was inadmissible as evidence of another offense.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 908.

§ 376 (Ga.App.) Testimony of the justice of the peace, who issued the warrant upon which an accusation was based, that he had information that accused had been convicted before, was improperly admitted, since it put the character of accused in issue.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 908.

(D) Materiality and Competency in General.

§ 381 (Ga.App.) Evidence of good character may of itself be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt and produce an acquittal.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

Proof of good character may of itself annihilate a plain case of guilt by discrediting and impeaching the testimony upon which the conclusion of guilt is necessarily based.—Id.

§ 393 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for keeping whisky for illegal sale in violation of a municipal ordinance, evidence that defendant's valise contained whisky was properly admitted, where he voluntarily disclosed the contents of the valise.—Weatherington v. State, 79 S. E. 240.

(E) Best and Secondary and Demonstrative Evidence.

§ 400 (Ga.App.) Parol evidence of the contents of a plea in a civil case, and of the judgment rendered therein, was improperly admitted, where it did not appear that the records had been lost or destroyed, or were otherwise inaccessible.—Duke v. State, 79 S. E. 861.

(F) Admissions, Declarations, and Hearsay.

§§ 419, 420 (Ga.App.) Testimony of the justice of the peace, who issued the warrant upon which an accusation was based, that he had information that accused had been convicted before, was improperly admitted, since it was hearsay.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 908.

(G) Acts and Declarations of Conspirators and Codefendants.

§ 422 (Ga.) On a joint trial of a husband and wife for murder, the wife's statement, not under oath, that she killed deceased could not be taken as evidence in favor of her husband.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 422 (N.C.) One of two defendants jointly on trial for murder cannot object that declarations of his codefendant were made while in custody and under duress.—State v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 419.

§ 424 (S.C.) On the trial of a man and a woman for fornication, the woman's admissions to the deputy sheriff when arrested could not be considered as evidence against the man.—State v. Wade, 79 S. E. 106.

§ 427 (Ga.) A conspiracy between two defendants to commit the murder charged may be shown by circumstantial evidence, as well as by direct testimony.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

Where, in the joint trial of two persons for murder, the state relied on circumstantial evidence and the existence of a conspiracy, a letter admitted to have been written jointly by the defendants to the deceased held admissible, as tending to show a conspiracy between them.—Id.

(I) Opinion Evidence.

§ 448 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 715, a witness' testimony merely that defendant "took an affidavit" should have been excluded as opinionative.—Johnson v. State, 79 S. E. 524.

§ 493 (Ga.App.) Testimony of a deputy sheriff that he saw defendants playing and betting for money held sufficient to sustain a conviction, where the witness was not cross-examined, as against an objection that it was a mere conclusion of the witness.—Curry v. State, 79 S. E. 771.

(K) Confessions.

§ 528 (Ga.App.) Under Pen. Code 1910, § 1037, providing that the confession of one joint offender made after the enterprise is ended is admissible only against himself, it was error to admit in evidence the pleas of guilty of defendants jointly indicted with accused on trial for assault and battery.—Gray v. State, 79 S. E. 223.

§ 535 (Ga.App.) To authorize a conviction of arson, the corpus delicti must be established, independently of the confession of the accused.—Sims v. State, 79 S. E. 1133.

(M) Weight and Sufficiency.

§ 552 (Ga.App.) To warrant conviction on circumstantial evidence, the proved facts must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but inconsistent with every other reasonable hypothesis.—Flannigan v. State, 79 S. E. 745.

§ 552 (Ga.App.) Circumstantial evidence may support a conviction.—Douglas v. State, 79 S. E. 1134.

§ 552 (S.C.) Where the circumstantial evidence was not inconsistent with accused's innocence, it does not warrant a conviction, as they must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt.—State v. Wade, 79 S. E. 106.

§ 553 (Ga.App.) The jury may believe the testimony of a single witness, though it is contradicted by the testimony of several witnesses, and though testimony is introduced sufficient to impeach him, if believed.—Cook v. State, 79 S. E. 87.

§ 561 (Ga.App.) The presumption of innocence is affirmative proof in behalf of one accused of crime, and places on the prosecution the burden of rebutting it by proof of guilt beyond any reasonable doubt.—Butts v. State, 79 S. E. 87.

§ 562 (Ga.App.) A bare suspicion of guilt is not sufficient to support a conviction.—Williams v. State, 79 S. E. 763.

§ 572 (Ga.App.) To establish an alibi, the evidence must exclude the possibility of defendant's presence but need not establish the impossibility of his presence beyond a reasonable doubt.—Evans v. State, 79 S. E. 916.

XI. TIME OF TRIAL AND CONTINUANCE.

§ 594 (Ga.App.) Where the showing for a continuance in a criminal case was in all respects regular, and the testimony of the absent witness was vitally material to the defense, refusal to grant a continuance was error.—Morgan v. State, 79 S. E. 247.

§ 594 (Ga.App.) A motion for a continuance for an absent witness for defendant should not be overruled, though there be other witnesses on the same issue, where testimony of the absent witness is vitally important to the disproof of defendant's guilt, and due diligence is shown.—Britt v. State, 79 S. E. 859.

§ 594 (N.C.) Refusal of a continuance for absence of a witness who was a fugitive from justice, by whom accused expected to prove that he was under the influence of cocaine at the time of the homicide, was not error, where he claimed that he could prove the fact by other witnesses, whom he did not call.—State v. Daniels, 79 S. E. 953.

§ 603 (Ga.) A motion for continuance for an absent witness was properly denied, there being no showing that he resided in the county in which the case was pending, or even in the state.—Allen v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

XII. TRIAL.

(A) Preliminary Proceedings.

§ 622 (S.C.) The nature of the offense does not prevent a severance in the trial of the parties to a single act of fornication.—State v. Wade, 79 S. E. 106.

(B) Course and Conduct of Trial in General.

§ 633 (N.C.) The mode of conducting the trial is in the discretion of the trial judge.—State v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 419.

§ 636 (Ga.App.) An accused has a right to be present in person and to be represented by his attorney during every stage of his trial from arraignment to verdict.—Miller v. State, 79 S. E. 232.

§ 641 (Ga.) Refusal to permit counsel, appointed to represent accused on a trial for murder, more than ten minutes to confer with him before entering upon the trial held violative of the constitutional guaranty of "benefit of counsel" (Const. art. 1, § 1, par. 5 [Civ. Code 1910, § 6361]).—Reliford v. State, 79 S. E. 1128.

§ 655 (Ga.App.) A trial judge's intimation of an opinion on the existence of a material fact, when made in a question propounded by him, is ground for reversal, under Pen. Code 1910, § 1058, and Civ. Code 1910, § 4863.—Cor v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

§ 656 (Ga.App.) The presiding judge may properly question a witness as to a transaction under investigation in a criminal case, but for him to intimate an opinion by such questions is repugnant to Pen. Code 1910, § 1058, as a direct statement of opinion.—Murphy v. State, 79 S. E. 228.

(C) Reception of Evidence.

§ 665 (Ga.App.) The manner of the enforcement of a right accorded by Pen. Code 1910, § 1043, to either party to require the sequestration of witnesses rests largely within the trial court's discretion.—Hudgins v. State, 79 S. E. 367.

In enforcing the right accorded by Pen. Code 1910, § 1043, to either party to require sequestration of witnesses, it was not error to permit the prosecutor to remain in the courtroom throughout the trial.—Id.

§ 673 (N.C.) While the declarations of two defendants jointly on trial for murder were admissible only as against the party making them, it was not error to admit them where the jury were instructed that they were incompetent as to the other defendant.—State v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 419.

§ 683 (Ga.App.) It is error to refuse to permit accused to make a supplemental statement strictly in rebuttal of an alleged confession not shown upon the state's case in chief but reserved and introduced as new matter after accused had made his statement.—Timmons v. State, 79 S. E. 218.

(D) Objections to Evidence, Motions to Strike Out, and Exceptions.

§ 695½ [New, vol. 17 Key-No. Series] (Ga.) Failure of the court to rule upon an objection to the evidence is equivalent to overruling the objection.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

(E) Arguments and Conduct of Counsel.

§ 723 (Ga.App.) Where the language of the solicitor general in his argument was highly inflammable, and calculated to prejudice the jury against defendant, and not warranted by the evidence, the court should have declared a mistrial, or admonished the jury to disregard such language.—Manning v. State, 79 S. E. 905.

§ 730 (N.C.) The remark of the judge that defendant could deny it in reply to the unsound argument of defendant's counsel that in analogy to Revisal 1905, § 1631, a conversation between defendant and one, with whose murder he was charged, was incompetent, and no one could deny the truth of witness' statement, was not improper.—State v. Shelton, 79 S. E. 883.

(F) Province of Court and Jury in General.

§ 738 (Ga.App.) The question of intent rests ultimately with the jury.—Cosper v. State, 79 S. E. 94.

§ 762 (Ga.) An instruction that the fact that the woman alleged to have been raped made complaints is evidence, but the particulars of the complaint cannot be shown, is not an expression of opinion on the facts.—Allen v. State, 79 S. E. 20.

§ 762 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence shows that accused was drunk when he committed the crime, an instruction that voluntary drunkenness was no excuse is not objectionable as an expression of opinion.—Brown v. State, 79 S. E. 177.

§ 762 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for voluntary manslaughter by the unlawful administering of morphine, an instruction that the offense was complete if accused intended to administer the morphine and death resulted was not objectionable as an expression of opinion of accused's guilt.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

§ 763, 764 (Ga.) An instruction that the testimony of a detective or person interested or prejudiced should be scanned with care was properly refused; the weight of testimony and credibility of witnesses being exclusively for the jury.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 763, 764 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for voluntary manslaughter by the unlawful administering of morphine, an instruction that the offense was complete if accused intended to administer the morphine and death resulted was not objectionable as invading the province of the jury.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

§ 763, 764 (N.C.) Part of a charge, considered with what preceded and followed, held not a reference to the testimony of defendant's parents but a proper warning of the jury against being influenced by sympathy for either side.—State v. Fogleman, 79 S. E. 879.

§ 763, 764 (S.C.) Where it was undisputed that defendant killed deceased, and also that the killing was either in self-defense or murder, a charge that the law of self-defense arises out of necessity, and "right there is the pivotal point in the case," was not erroneous as a charge upon the facts.—State v. Spears, 79 S. E. 315.

(G) Necessity, Requisites, and Sufficiency of Instructions.

§ 775 (Ga.App.) An instruction requiring defendant to establish the defense of alibi to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt held erroneous.—Evans v. State, 79 S. E. 916.

§ 778 (S.C.) A charge in a prosecution for homicide that, if evidence showed beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant killed deceased, then the burden shifted to defendant to explain the killing, held not erroneous under the facts.—State v. Spears, 79 S. E. 315.

§ 779 (Ga.) That no conspiracy was charged in a joint indictment of two defendants for murder did not make it error to give a correct instruction on conspiracy, where there was evidence to authorize such charge.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 781 (Ga.) Evidence that accused stated, just after the shooting, that he had got one man "falling on his knees now," held to authorize an instruction as to the sufficiency of confessions to warrant a conviction.—Webb v. State, 79 S. E. 1126.

§ 782 (Ga.App.) An instruction that the object of legal investigation is not to ascertain the truth to an absolute certainty, which is not within the range of legal investigation, is not erroneous.—Flannigan v. State, 79 S. E. 745.

§ 782 (Ga.App.) It was error to instruct that evidence touching the good character of accused could warrant an acquittal only in connection with other evidence.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

§ 782 (N.C.) Under Pub. Laws 1913, c. 44, making possession of more than one gallon of spirituous liquors prima facie evidence of a violation thereof, the jury is not required to convict on such evidence, nor does the statute change the burden of proof, and it was therefore error to charge that, possession having been shown, it was accused's duty to show by the greater weight of the evidence that he did not have the liquor for purposes of sale.—State v. Wilkerson, 79 S. E. 888.

§ 784 (Ga.App.) Where the guilt of defendant is wholly dependent on circumstantial evidence, the jury should be instructed that, if the proved facts are consistent with innocence, defendant is entitled to an acquittal.—Allen v. State, 79 S. E. 769.

§ 784 (Ga.App.) Where the guilt of accused rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence, failure to charge on the law relating to such character of evidence is erroneous.—Kincaid v. State, 79 S. E. 770.

§ 784 (Ga.App.) A charge containing the interrogation, "Is there any other reasonable hypothesis or explanation of the existence of all the facts that is consistent with the innocence of the accused?" was not erroneous as excluding the possibility that if some of the circumstances relied on by the state were untrue, an acquittal might follow.—Douglas v. State, 79 S. E. 1134.

§ 785 (Ga.) An instruction on impeachment in a criminal case should embrace all the methods of impeachment so far as authorized by the evidence.—Webb v. State, 79 S. E. 1126.

§ 785 (N.C.) A charge as to the duty of the jury in considering the testimony of defendant's parents, relative to the question of bias and weight to be given their testimony, held proper.—State v. Fogleman, 79 S. E. 879.

§ 786 (Ga.App.) A charge in the language of the statute in reference to accused's statement at the trial, that the jury might believe the statement in preference to the sworn testimony "provided you believe it to be true," was not objectionable on account of the use of the quoted words.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 786 (Ga.App.) A charge that the prisoner's statement under oath should have such weight and effect as the jury sees fit to give it, and the jury may believe it in preference to the sworn testimony in the case, was not erroneous.—Douglas v. State, 79 S. E. 1134.

§ 786 (N.C.) A charge as to the duty of scrutinizing the testimony of defendant and the weight to be given his testimony held correct.—State v. Fogleman, 79 S. E. 879.

§ 809 (Ga.App.) An instruction that, when the jury "have reached a conviction under the evidence" and the law, they must write it in their verdict, and the use of the word "conviction," taken in connection with the context, could not have misled the jury to believe that the court had reference to the conviction of accused, rather than to the conviction in their own minds.—Flannigan v. State, 79 S. E. 745.

§ 814 (Ga.App.) Where it was not disputed that the crime, if committed, was committed within two years, failure to instruct that, to sustain a conviction, the crime must have been committed within the limitation period, was not error.—Cook v. State, 79 S. E. 87.

§ 814 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for the sale of narcotic drugs, in violation of Acts 1907, p. 121, as codified in Civ. Code 1910, §§ 1651, 1652, and Pen. Code 1910, § 459, it was error to instruct the jury to find defendant guilty if he sold the drugs to the person named in the accusation or "to any one else" within the last two years.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 908.

§ 814 (Ga.App.) Where there was no evidence that accused confessed, the judge was not required to instruct upon the subject of admissions and confessions.—Cox v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

§ 822 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for uttering a forged certificate of stock with intent to defraud a bank, an instruction to convict if the paper was uttered "with intent to defraud any person" was not erroneous, where the charge as a whole predicated conviction on an intent to defraud the bank.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 823 (Ga.) An instruction which stated the law of accidental killing in the language of Pen. Code 1910, § 40, and told the jury not to find defendant guilty if they were satisfied from the evidence that the killing was accidental, held not erroneous, as destroying the effect of a prior charge on reasonable doubt, when followed by an instruction to acquit defendant if not satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.—Jones v. State, 79 S. E. 114.

§ 823 (Ga.App.) An instruction, that when the guilt of accused is made to appear "to the satisfaction of the jury" they may convict regardless of evidence of good character, was not erroneous in excluding the reasonable doubt doctrine, where such doctrine was fully presented in other instructions.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 823 (N.C.) Error in charging that burden was on accused to show that possession of liquor was not for purpose of sale held not cured by a further instruction directing an acquittal if the jury had a reasonable doubt.—State v. Wilkerson, 79 S. E. 888.

(H) Requests for Instructions.

§ 824 (Ga.App.) Failure to define "felony," in an instruction on the right to kill to prevent the commission of a felony, is not error, in the absence of a request for such definition.—Faison v. State, 79 S. E. 39.

§ 824 (Ga.App.) An instruction that the guilt of accused must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the testimony to remove the presumption of innocence must be such as to remove any reasonable doubt, is sufficient, in the absence of request that the term "reasonable doubt" be defined.—Cook v. State, 79 S. E. 87.

§ 824 (Ga.App.) The court should have instructed a verdict of not guilty, if the intent to steal was formed after the killing of the cow taken, where such instruction, though not requested, was warranted by the evidence.—Hunter v. State, 79 S. E. 752.

§ 824 (Ga.App.) Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, one defense is that defendant was attempting to prevent an illegal arrest, but there is no evidence thereof outside defendant's statement, the court need not, in the absence of request, instruct on the law relative to resistance of illegal arrest.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

§ 825 (Ga.App.) In the absence of a request for more definite instructions, an instruction that the grand jury had returned an indictment charging defendant with murder, and that defendant had pleaded not guilty, sufficiently presented the issue.—Faison v. State, 79 S. E. 39.

§ 825 (Ga.App.) Where the instructions were correct in the abstract and applicable to the evidence, if any additional instructions were desired, they should have been requested.—Hollis v. State, 79 S. E. 85.

§ 829 (Ga.App.) Where the judge submitted the contentions of accused, embraced in a written request, in his instructions given, the denial of such request was not error.—Cameron v. State, 79 S. E. 745.

(I) Objections to Instructions or Refusal Thereof, and Exceptions.

§ 847 (S.C.) A defendant, who through his attorneys pleaded guilty during trial and made no objection to the charge submitting his plea and statement to the jury to determine whether they would recommend mercy, thereby waived his right to object that he did not enter the plea in person, that his statement was not a confession, and that the court failed to advise him of the consequences of his plea.—State v. Vaughn, 79 S. E. 312.

(J) Custody, Conduct, and Deliberations of Jury.

§ 850 (Ga.App.) A deputy sheriff, who is also the prosecutor, is disqualified to have charge of the jury pending the trial.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 908.

§ 864 (Ga.App.) Where the trial judge, upon going to the jury room with the sheriff to inquire if the jury desired to be put to bed, was asked by a juror as to what he had charged with reference to the jury's right to recommend punishment as for a misdemeanor, and the judge stated the substance of such charge, this did not amount to a recharge, but was equivalent to an instruction merely on the form of verdict returnable.—Miller v. State, 79 S. E. 232.

§ 865 (Ga.App.) Where a jury after deliberating 18 to 20 hours requested the sheriff to ask the court to recharge them or order a mistrial, his statement that the judge was conscientiously opposed to mistrial, and that it would be embarrassing to ask him, as a result of which the jury shortly thereafter returned a verdict of guilty, amounted to coercion.—Renfro v. State, 79 S. E. 758.

(K) Verdict.

§ 877 (S.C.) On the trial of a man and a woman for fornication with each other, one may be acquitted and the other convicted.—State v. Wade, 79 S. E. 106.

§ 878 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence demanded a conviction on both counts of the indictment, a general verdict of guilty was proper.—Cronin v. State, 79 S. E. 747.

(L) Waiver and Correction of Irregularities and Errors.

§ 895 (S.C.) A defendant in a criminal case may waive a constitutional as well as a statutory provision intended for his benefit.—State v. Vaughn, 79 S. E. 312.

XIII. MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL AND IN ARREST.

§ 909 (Ga.App.) One who has filed a plea of guilty cannot move for a new trial.—Bearden v. State, 79 S. E. 79.

§ 914 (Ga.App.) That the affidavit on which an accusation was based was not properly attested by the magistrate is matter for demurrer or motion to quash, and comes too late when raised for the first time in a motion for a new trial.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 918 (Ga.App.) Failure of the court to require strict sequestration of witnesses is not ground for a new trial, where it is not manifest that the trial judge abused his discretion.—Hudgins v. State, 79 S. E. 367.

§ 918 (Ga.App.) Refusal of the trial judge to allow counsel additional time, under superior court rule 5 (Civ. Code 1910, § 6264), to argue a misdemeanor case will not be cause for new trial, when the evidence demands a conviction.—Quinlan v. State, 79 S. E. 768.

§ 918 (Ga.App.) Under Pen. Code 1910, § 1038, an intimation of an opinion by the court unfavorable to the accused in the examination of witnesses is ground for a new trial.—Nobles v. State, 79 S. E. 801.

§ 921 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for selling "near beer," a substitute for intoxicating liquors, without a license, it was not ground for new trial that the court admitted in evidence copies of a letter from the Governor to the attorney assisting in the prosecution, designating him as special agent to collect the unpaid taxes due by "near beer" dealers, and a letter from the attorney to accused demanding payment of the tax.—Quinlan v. State, 79 S. E. 768.

§ 922 (Ga.App.) The failure of the court to charge that the defendant enters upon his trial with a presumption of innocence, which remains with him in the nature of evidence until rebutted to the exclusion of reasonable doubt, requires a new trial.—Butts v. State, 79 S. E. 87.

§ 922 (Ga.App.) The evidence as to alibi not being such as to exclude the possibility of defendant's presence, and there being no request for an instruction, the failure to charge on the defense of alibi was not ground for a new trial.—Gadlin v. State, 79 S. E. 751.

§ 922 (Ga.App.) An instruction that the jury might recommend defendant to mercy, although they found him guilty of a felony, held not to require a new trial, especially where the jury were told that, if they returned a verdict of guilty of voluntary manslaughter with a recommendation of mercy, such recommendation could not reduce the crime from a felony to a misdemeanor.—Odum v. State, 79 S. E. 358.

§ 923 (Ga.App.) The relationship within the prohibited degrees of a juror to defendant, if unknown to the latter until after verdict, is not ground for new trial.—Dawson v. State, 79 S. E. 745.

§ 925½ (Ga.App.) The refusal of the trial court on request to conceal from the jury, by pasting over it, a verdict of a previous jury entered on the bill of indictment against one jointly indicted with accused is not ground for new trial, being a matter within the discretion of the trial judge.—Kincaid v. State, 79 S. E. 770.

§ 929 (Ga.App.) Where the jury in a criminal case requested the sheriff to ask the court either to recharge them or order a mistrial, the act of the sheriff in stating that the judge was conscientiously opposed to mistrials was ground for a new trial, where shortly after the making of such statement to the sheriff the jury returned a verdict of guilty.—Renfroe v. State, 79 S. E. 758.

§ 935 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence, though conflicting, authorizes a verdict of guilty, a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence.—Hudgins v. State, 79 S. E. 367.

§ 938 (Ga.App.) Where defendant was convicted on the testimony of one witness that the offense was committed in the presence of a third person, a motion for new trial, with affidavits that such third person could not have been procured at the trial, but could be procured on a new trial, and would testify that the offense was not committed as claimed, should have been granted.—Meeks v. State, 79 S. E. 744.

§ 942 (Ga.App.) Where newly discovered evidence was merely impeaching, there was no abuse of discretion in overruling such ground of motion for new trial.—Brown v. State, 79 S. E. 177.

§ 942 (Ga.App.) Newly discovered evidence, merely impeaching in character, is not ground for new trial.—Williams v. State, 79 S. E. 767.

§ 945 (Ga.) A new trial was properly denied, where the alleged newly discovered evidence was not such as would be likely to produce a different result.—Jones v. State, 79 S. E. 114.

§ 945 (Ga.App.) Newly discovered evidence is not ground for a new trial where it does not plainly appear that it will probably change the result.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 862.

§ 955 (Ga.App.) A party moving for a new trial need not make up a brief of evidence from the official stenographer's report.—Bugg v. State, 79 S. E. 748.

Where counsel for defendant moving for new trial presents brief of evidence, it is for the judge to approve or reject it, and it is immaterial whether counsel for opposite party agrees to the brief or approves it.—Id.

On presentation of an incorrect brief of evidence, the trial judge may require it to be corrected, and on failure so to do the judge may refuse to approve it after calling attention to the corrections necessary.—Id.

The trial judge may require the notes of the official stenographer to be written out at the public expense, to be compared with the brief of evidence presented on motion for new trial, but cannot require accused to make up a brief from such report.—Id.

XIV. JUDGMENT, SENTENCE, AND FINAL COMMITMENT.

§ 982 (Ga.) A trial judge cannot indefinitely suspend the imposition of the punishment prescribed by law upon a defendant who has been convicted or has pleaded guilty.—Hancock v. Rogers, 79 S. E. 558.

That the city judge erroneously suspended the sentence prescribed by law did not deprive him of authority to subsequently impose the sentence.—Id.

§ 982 (N.C.) A court has power to suspend sentence upon one convicted or pleading guilty to a crime, upon reasonable terms and conditions imposed at the time the sentence is suspended.—State v. Everett, 79 S. E. 274.

Where a defendant is present in court when an order suspending sentence upon certain conditions is made, and does not object thereto, his assent to the order will be implied.—Id.

The payment of the costs by one against whom sentence had been suspended on condition that he pay the costs and satisfy the court of his good behavior is not such performance of the conditions as to deprive the court of power thereafter to impose sentence upon ascertaining that the defendant is again violating the law.—Id.

A condition in an order suspending sentence that the defendant appear at each term and show that he had demeaned himself as a law abiding citizen does not render the judgment uncertain as an alternative judgment.—Id.

Where sentence had been suspended during good behavior, and was thereafter imposed by the court, after a hearing at which testimony on both sides was heard as to subsequent violations of the law by the defendant, the sentence was for the original offense and not for the subsequent conduct.—Id.

The suspension of sentence upon one who had pleaded guilty to unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, upon condition that he pay the costs and show good behavior at each term of the court for two years, was not an abuse of the court's discretion as to the terms upon which sentence might be suspended.—Id.

§ 989 (Ga.) Where the city court judge erroneously suspended the sentence prescribed by law, it was not a prerequisite to a subsequent imposition of the sentence by him that he call upon the defendant to show cause why the sentence should not be imposed.—Hancock v. Rogers, 79 S. E. 558.

§ 1001 (Ga.) The judge of a city court cannot suspend execution of a sentence imposed by him, except as incidental to a review of the judgment.—Hancock v. Rogers, 79 S. E. 558.

XV. APPEAL AND ERROR, AND CERTIORARI.

(A) Form of Remedy, Jurisdiction, and Right of Review.

§ 1014 (Va.) The Court of Appeals is without jurisdiction to entertain an amended petition for a writ of error, where the original petition was denied on the ground that the judgment was clearly right, since Code 1904, § 3406, provides that the Court of Appeals shall not entertain another petition for a writ of error after rejection on that ground.—Morgan v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 388.

§ 1023 (Ga.) Act Aug. 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 74), relating to change of venue in criminal cases, and providing for a direct bill of exceptions, which "shall operate as a supersedeas," is inapplicable, in case of the denial of a petition for a change of venue, based solely on the ground that an impartial jury cannot be obtained in the county; and hence the denial of a motion on such ground was a proper matter of exceptions pendente lite, and not of a direct bill of exceptions to the Supreme Court.—Coleman v. George, 79 S. E. 543.

§ 1023 (Ga.App.) An order overruling a demurrer to an indictment is reviewable under Civ. Code 1910, § 6138, authorizing a bill of exceptions either to a final judgment or to a judgment which would have been final if rendered as claimed by the excepting party.—Leary v. State, 79 S. E. 584.

(B) Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds of Review.

§ 1030 (Ga.App.) A reviewing court will not pass on the constitutionality of a statute unless the question was raised in the court below.—Cooper v. State, 79 S. E. 94.

§ 1038 (Ga.) Failure to instruct fully on impeachment in a criminal case is not reviewable, where no written request is made therefor.—Webb v. State, 79 S. E. 1126.

§ 1038 (N.C.) That complaint may be made on appeal of the trial judge having incorrectly stated a contention of defendant's counsel, counsel must, at the time, have called it to the court's attention.—State v. Fogleman, 79 S. E. 879.

§ 1058 (Ga.App.) To entitle accused to bring error from the overruling of a demurrer to the indictment, it is not essential that he except to the final judgment of conviction.—Leary v. State, 79 S. E. 584.

Where an exception is made to an interlocutory order which is neither final nor would have been final if it had been rendered as requested by accused, he must except to the final judgment of conviction before the order is reviewable.—Id.

§ 1059 (Ga.App.) A general exception, that a statute "is illegal and void and contains subject-matter not expressed in the caption of said act," is too indefinite to raise any question for review.—Myrick v. State, 79 S. E. 580, 756.

§ 1063 (Ga.App.) To entitle accused to bring error from the overruling of a demurrer to the indictment, it is not essential that he move for a new trial.—Leary v. State, 79 S. E. 584.

(D) Record and Proceedings Not in Record.

§ 1092 (Ga.App.) Since there is no statute authorizing the service of a bill of exceptions by mail, a writ of error in a criminal case will be dismissed, where the bill of exceptions is certified to as having been merely served by mail.—Jackson v. State, 79 S. E. 377.

Since the mere certification of counsel is not proper evidence of service of a bill of exceptions pursuant to Civ. Code 1910, § 8160, the writ of error in a criminal case will be dismissed where the only evidence of service of a bill of exceptions is a certificate of counsel.—Id.

§ 1092 (Ga.App.) Where no bill of exceptions is filed with the clerk of the trial court within 15 days from the certification of the judge, as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 8167, the writ of error must be dismissed.—Haddon v. State, 79 S. E. 583.

§ 1103 (Ga.App.) A document containing 34 typewritten pages, 11 of which contained evidence in extenso and narrative form, and 23 of which were made up of questions and answers transcribed from the reporter's notes, held insufficient as a brief of the evidence.—Trueheart v. State, 79 S. E. 755.

Where no sufficient brief of the evidence, as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 8093, was filed, matters raised in the motion for new trial and depending on the evidence could not be reviewed.—Id.

§ 1105 (Ga.App.) The recitals in the grounds of the amendment to the motion for a new trial, not being approved as true by the trial judge, cannot be considered.—Williams v. State, 79 S. E. 767.

§ 1120 (N.C.) Error, in a criminal case in receiving as evidence a complaint in a civil suit, would not be reviewed where its contents were not set out so as to show prejudice.—State v. Smith, 79 S. E. 979.

§ 1122 (Ga.App.) Where only fragments of the charge, in themselves abstractly correct, were presented for review by the record, the reviewing court could not determine that the instruction on mutual combat and the defense which could arise under Pen. Code 1910, § 73, in case of urgent danger, was so given as to confuse the jury and injure defendant.—Faison v. State, 79 S. E. 39.

§ 1122 (Ga.App.) An exception complaining that the judge erred in failing to charge as to insanity of accused at the time of the perjury, without alleging any reason why the failure to charge was error or how accused was prejudiced, held insufficient to present anything for review.—Cox v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

(E) Assignment of Errors and Briefs.

§ 1129 (Ga.App.) The validity of an assignment of error depends on verification by the trial judge.—Vernon v. State, 79 S. E. 85.

§ 1129 (Ga.App.) Objections to the form of a criminal accusation cannot be considered upon assignments of error presented as grounds of a motion for a new trial.—Duke v. State, 79 S. E. 861.

(G) Review.

§ 1134 (Ga.App.) Where a conviction must be reversed for a particular error, other errors assigned will not be considered, where they will probably not occur on another trial.—Dunn v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 1134 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence demands a conviction, assignments of error as to the charge of the court will not be considered.—Quinlan v. State, 79 S. E. 763.

§ 1134 (N.C.) Where a court suspended sentence on condition that the defendant appear at each term for two years and show good behavior on his part, the question of the power of the court to suspend sentence indefinitely need not be considered.—State v. Everett, 79 S. E. 274.

§ 1144 (Ga.App.) The striking of a plea in abatement is not ground for a reversal, where it does not affirmatively appear that the plea was filed before arraignment.—Barlow v. State, 79 S. E. 93.

§ 1144 (Va.) Where, after demurrer to a plea in abatement had been sustained, the commonwealth offered to reply and over objection was permitted to do so, and accused joined in the replication which was tried to the court, it will be presumed that the demurrer was withdrawn or waived, though the record does not show it.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

§ 1151 (Ga.App.) The Court of Appeals will not interfere with the judge's discretion in overruling a motion for a continuance because of an absent witness, where the state has made a countershowning as to such witness' testimony.—Hester v. State, 79 S. E. 746.

§ 1151 (N.C.) An order denying a continuance is not reviewable, unless there has been an abuse of discretion.—State v. Daniels, 79 S. E. 953.

§ 1152 (Ga.App.) A finding on a motion for a new trial that a juror complained of because of prejudice and the expression of an opinion before the trial, was competent will not be disturbed in the absence of a clear abuse of discretion.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 862.

§ 1152 (N.C.) The mode of conducting the trial, being within the discretion of the trial judge, is not reviewable unless in case of abuse of discretion.—State v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 419.

§ 1152 (S.C.) Exceptions to the rejection or acceptance of jurors in the trial of a criminal case cannot be sustained where the defendant fails to show an abuse of the trial court's discretion in making such rulings.—State v. Vaughn, 79 S. E. 312.

§ 1153 (N.C.) The mode of the examination of witnesses is not reviewable except for very gross abuse of discretion.—State v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 419.

§ 1153 (W.Va.) Refusal of the trial court to admit character evidence at a certain stage of the trial was not ground for reversal, in the absence of an abuse of discretion to the prejudice of the complaining party.—State v. Edwards, 79 S. E. 1005.

§ 1156 (Ga.) The discretionary refusal of a new trial will not be disturbed on error, where the evidence authorized the verdict.—Jones v. State, 79 S. E. 114.

§ 1158 (Ga.App.) Where there was some evidence to support the findings of the recorder of a city in a prosecution for violation of an ordinance, the appellate court will not disturb the judgment of the superior court in refusing to sanction the petition for certiorari.—Davis v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 747.

§ 1159 (Ga.App.) A conviction of burglary will not be set aside on appeal merely because the evidence is wholly circumstantial, where the facts proved are not only consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but exclude every other reasonable hypothesis within the requirements of Pen. Code 1910, § 1010.—Miller v. State, 79 S. E. 232.

§ 1159 (Ga.App.) A conviction will not be reversed, as against the weight of the evidence, when there is sufficient to sustain it.—Myrick v. State, 79 S. E. 550, 756.

§ 1159 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence was conflicting as to whether accused, while justifiably shooting at another person, accidentally shot the person named in the indictment, or whether he shot recklessly into a crowd, and thus inflicted such injury, a verdict finding accused guilty of shooting at another will not be disturbed.—Wilson v. State, 79 S. E. 767.

§ 1160 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence authorized a conviction, and there is no complaint of any error of law, a verdict approved by the trial judge will not be set aside.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 51.

§ 1160 (Ga.App.) Where there is some evidence to support the verdict, though not entirely satisfactory, the trial judge having approved the verdict, the same will not be disturbed on appeal.—Ross v. State, 79 S. E. 746.

§ 1160 (Ga.App.) The verdict of the jury, approved by the trial judge, will not be disturbed on appeal.—Gadlin v. State, 79 S. E. 751.

§ 1163 (Ga.App.) The right of defendant to make such statement as he may deem proper in defense, given by Pen. Code 1910, § 1036, cannot be abridged; but where the matter omitted therefrom by the rulings of the court was trivial, its omission cannot be presumed harmful to accused.—Skinner v. State, 79 S. E. 181.

§ 1166½ (Ga.App.) Questions asked of a state's witness by the trial judge, which tended to impress, unfavorably to accused, those circumstances indicating guilt, and to convey an impression that the court believed more could be proven against him if the witness could be induced to make the disclosure, held prejudicial.—Nobles v. State, 79 S. E. 861.

§ 1169 (Ga.) In a prosecution for murder, error in allowing the state to introduce evidence of specific acts of defendant tending to show his violent character was harmless, where the evidence was of such a weak nature that the jury could not well have believed that a threat was made by defendant, and the evidence of his guilt was conclusive.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 1169 (N.C.) In a prosecution for wife abandonment, accused was not prejudiced by evidence of the sheriff that he could not find him in his county when he attempted to serve the process; there being no dispute that defendant had actually abandoned his wife and left her without adequate support.—State v. Smith, 79 S. E. 979.

In a prosecution for wife abandonment, error in admitting a part of defendant's answer in a divorce suit instituted by the wife, but not tried, was not prejudicial.—Id.

§ 1170 (W.Va.) Any error in the exclusion of evidence held harmless, where it was subsequently admitted.—State v. Edwards, 79 S. E. 1005.

§ 1171 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for voluntary manslaughter, by the unlawful administering of morphine, any error in permitting the solicitor general to read from medical books extracts relating to the properties of virburnum held harmless, where the evidence showed that death was caused by morphine, and there was no claim that it was caused or contributed to by virburnum.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

§ 1172 (Ga.) An instruction as to circumstantial evidence, that the guilt of defendant must be proved to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis, is harmless, even though no such evidence was involved.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 1127.

§ 1172 (Ga.App.) Failure to instruct that accused was not guilty of assault with intent to murder unless actuated by malice and intent to kill, if error, was harmless where he was convicted only of shooting at another.—Beddingfield v. State, 79 S. E. 581.

§ 1172 (N.C.) Complaint may not be made of the trial judge having stated one of the contentions of defendant's counsel; it not appearing that it was an incorrect statement or that it prejudiced defendant.—State v. Fogleman, 79 S. E. 870.

§ 1173 (Ga.) In the joint trial of two persons for murder, failure to charge as to the effect of an admission was not prejudicial to the defendant convicted, where such instruction, if given, could have applied only to the other defendant.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 1174 (Ga.App.) That the trial judge, upon going to the jury room with the sheriff to inquire whether the jurors desired to be put to bed, stated, in reply to a question by a juror, that he had instructed that the jury could recommend that defendant be punished as for a misdemeanor, if error, was harmless, where the verdict of guilty was strongly supported by the evidence, though such verdict recommended that a misdemeanor sentence be imposed.—Miller v. State, 79 S. E. 232.

§ 1178 (Ga.App.) Assignments of error complaining of the erroneous admission of evidence of defendant's conviction of another offense, and of an instruction on impeachment, will be deemed abandoned, when not referred to in the brief or argument of defendant's counsel.—Hudgins v. State, 79 S. E. 367.

§ 1178 (N.C.) An alleged error not argued in the brief will be deemed waived as expressly provided by Supreme Court rule 34 (140 N. C. 666, 53 S. E. ix).—State v. Smith, 79 S. E. 979.

§ 1179 (Ga.App.) The Court of Appeals cannot disturb a superior court judge's refusal to set aside on certiorari a sentence imposed within statutory limits by a city court in a criminal case.—Myrick v. State, 79 S. E. 580, 756.

XVII. PUNISHMENT AND PREVENTION OF CRIME.

§ 1205 (Ga.App.) A defendant, convicted of larceny in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 175, cannot be sentenced, since such section prescribes no punishment.—Jenkins v. State, 79 S. E. 861.

§ 1206 (S.C.) Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 702), changing the manner of inflicting the death penalty from hanging to electrocution, is not unconstitutional as applied to one who committed a crime punishable by death prior to the enactment of that law.—State v. Vaughn, 79 S. E. 312.

§ 1208 (Ga.App.) The trial court's exercise of discretion in fixing the quantum of punishment to be imposed within the statutory limits cannot be disturbed on review.—Beddingfield v. State, 79 S. E. 581.

Whichard*, 79 S. E. 508.

CUSTODY.

See Carriers, § 76; Divorce, § 289; Execution, §§ 129, 156.

§ 15 (Ga.App.) A warehouse receipt, providing that cotton was held subject to presentation of the receipt only, the paying of expenses and advances, "acts of fire and Providence excepted," held subject to explanation so far as related to the quoted phrase, and to proof that by a recognized local custom, defendant undertook to insure all cotton in its warehouse.—Rochelle Gin & Cotton Co. v. Fisher, 79 S. E. 534.

§ 21 (Ga.App.) In an action for the balance of the price of shingles, evidence held sufficient to take to the jury the questions whether a certain custom as to counting shingles existed in the market where they were bought, whether the defendant knew of such custom, and whether the contract was made irrespective of the custom.—Louisiana Red Cypress Co. v. George Gilmore & Co., 79 S. E. 379.

DAMAGES.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 1081, 1062, 1178; Assumpsit, Action of, § 8; Carriers, §§ 36, 105, 319; Contracts, § 324; Corporations, § 487; Death, §§ 86, 95; Drains, § 57; Eminent Domain, §§ 69-136, 266; Execution, § 199; Executors and Administrators, § 122; False Imprisonment, § 7; Husband and Wife, §§ 209, 334; Negligence, §§ 39, 101; Nuisance, § 72; Parent and Child, § 6; Railroads, § 72; Sales, §§ 370, 392; Waters and Water Courses, § 126.

III. GROUNDS AND SUBJECTS OF COMPENSATORY DAMAGES.

(A) Direct or Remote, Contingent, or Prospective Consequences or Losses.

§ 20 (Ga.App.) Where a petition sets forth an action ex delicto, plaintiffs are not restricted to the damages reasonably within the contemplation of the parties, but may recover all damages directly traceable to defendant's neglect.—J. B. Carr & Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 41.

§ 53 (N.C.) In an action for injuries to a servant, mental suffering, consisting of worry concerning the welfare of his wife and child during the period when he was unable to work, is too remote to constitute a proper element of damage.—Ferebee v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 685.

V. EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

§ 91 (S.C.) If a tort is committed under such circumstances that a person of ordinary reason and prudence would have been conscious of it as such, punitive damages may be inflicted though there is no willful intent.—Eberle v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 793.

VI. MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

(A) Injuries to the Person.

§ 97 (Ga.App.) In estimating damages for personal injuries, the loss of ability to labor may be considered as pain and suffering.—City of Rome v. Ford, 79 S. E. 243.

§ 100 (N.C.) In an action for personal injuries resulting in diminished earning capacity, the measure of damages is not the difference between the probable earnings of the plaintiff before and after the injury, but the reasonable resent value of the diminution in his earning capacity.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

VII. INADEQUATE AND EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

§ 132 (S.C.) In an action for injuries to a railroad engineer, a verdict awarding plaintiff 40,000 held not excessive.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

VIII. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, AND ASSESSMENT.

(A) Pleading.

§ 159 (W.Va.) A smaller amount of damages may be proven than that laid in the declaration.—McLain v. West Virginia Automobile Co., 9 S. E. 731.

(B) Evidence.

§ 178 (Ga.App.) Where, in a personal injury case, it was alleged and proved that plaintiff was rendered unable to do his accustomed work and suffered great mental anguish and physical pain, plaintiff's testimony that the fact that he was unable to work and carry on his duties as before worried him was properly admitted.—City of Rome v. Ford, 79 S. E. 243.

(C) Proceedings for Assessment.

§ 208 (S.C.) In an action for injuries to an engineer by the alleged incompetency of his fireman, evidence held to warrant submission of plaintiff's right to recover punitive damages on the theory that defendant's foreman had recklessly disregarded plaintiff's right to the assistance of a competent fireman.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

§ 215 (W.Va.) In a suit under the civil damage act, authorizing recovery of damages from the sale of intoxicants, it is error to peremptorily charge that the jury "shall" or "should" find exemplary damages; such damages being wholly within the jury's discretion.—Greer v. Arlington, 79 S. E. 720.

§ 216 (Ga.) Where, in an action against an employer for injuries to a boy, plaintiff testified that he lost about one-half of his hand, and could do little work with the remainder, and was confined to the house for more than a week, and could not work for two or three months, and that his injuries still caused him pain at night, it authorized an instruction on pain, past and future.—Elk Cotton Mills v. Grant, 79 S. E. 836.

§ 216 (Ga.App.) Where the petition in a personal injury action against a municipality claimed actual damages for loss of ability to labor and physician's bills, but there was proof only of mental anguish and physical pain, it was not error to instruct that there was no particular rule for determining the damages recoverable for the mental pain and suffering out that such damages were left to the enlightened consciences of intelligent jurors.—City of Rome v. Ford, 79 S. E. 243.

DEATH.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 1050, 1058; Constitutional Law, §§ 203, 249, 305, 309; Criminal Law, § 1206; Evidence, § 576; Master and Servant, §§ 270, 274, 289; Municipal Corporations, § 818; Railroads, §§ 282, 400; Street Railroads, §§ 113, 117; Trial, §§ 156, 295, 296.

I. ACTIONS FOR CAUSING DEATH.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 31 (N.C.) Under federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, as amended in 1910 by adding section 9, making interstate railroad companies liable to the personal representative of an employee killed by the company's negligence, for the benefit of the employee's parents, and, if none, then of the next of kin dependent upon such employee, a parent of an adult son could recover for his wrongful death by showing a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit without showing actual dependency.—Dooley v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 970.

(D) Pleading and Evidence.

§ 47 (Ga.) A petition in an action for damages for the tortious killing of plaintiff's husband, who took poison, causing his death, which alleged that defendants wrote a letter to deceased requesting him to resign a certain position and advising him to make no inquiry as to the reasons for the demand, and that defendants "knew" such letter would bring about decedent's death, held demurrable, in the absence of any allegation that the letter advised or suggested that decedent kill himself.—Stevens v. Steadman, 79 S. E. 564.

§ 75 (N.C.) In an action by a father under the federal Employers' Liability Act for damages for the negligent death of his son while employed on an interstate railroad, evidence held to sustain a finding that plaintiff had a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life of his son.—Dooley v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 970.

(E) Damages, Forfeiture, or Fine.

§ 86 (N.C.) The damages recoverable by a parent for the negligent death of a son under the federal Employers' Liability Act are limited to such loss as results to the parent because of being deprived of a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit by the wrongful death of the employee.—Dooley v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 970.

§ 95 (S.C.) The recovery under federal Employers' Liability Act for the wrongful death of a servant is limited to compensation for pecuniary loss.—Bennett v. Southern Ry.-Carolina Division, 79 S. E. 710.

The measure of damages allowed in actions for wrongful death held limited to the actual loss suffered, which, in case the deceased is a husband or father or wife or mother, may include loss of services or counsel and training, but not loss of companionship.—Id.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(A) Nature and Essentials of Conveyances in General.

§ 19 (Va.) Where a grantee under a conveyance in consideration of the grantor's support failed to support the grantor, and denied that she was under any legal obligation to do so, the consideration failed, and the conveyance would be rescinded in a court of equity.—Martin v. Hall, 79 S. E. 320.

(B) Form and Contents of Instruments.

§ 36 (Ga.) It is essential to a valid deed that there be words showing an intention to grant a present estate; Civ. Code 1910, § 4182, providing that no prescribed form is essential, not dispensing with the necessity of such words.—Caldwell v. Caldwell, 79 S. E. 853.

(C) Execution.

§ 45 (N.C.) A grantee who receives and accepts a deed is liable on its covenants to be performed by him, as the consideration of the grant or a part thereof, whether he signed it or not.—Henry v. Heggie, 79 S. E. 982.

(D) Delivery.

§ 54 (Va.) Delivery of a deed is essential to its validity.—Leftwich v. Early, 79 S. E. 384.

§ 56 (Va.) The fact of delivery of a deed depends on the intention which must be manifested by some express act of the grantor or by acts, words, or conduct, and the grantor must lose control or dominion over the deed, and it must be his intention to pass title at the time and lose control over it.—Leftwich v. Early, 79 S. E. 384.

§ 58 (Va.) Where a wife, who had not delivered a deed to her husband, intrusted it to a third person for use by him in connection with an election, held, that this did not constitute a delivery which passed title to the husband.—Leftwich v. Early, 79 S. E. 384.

§ 66 (N.C.) Delivery to and acceptance by grantee of a deed so as to bind him by its covenants and stipulations held to be a mixed question of fact and law; and the jury should find the facts and the judge declare the law arising thereon.—Henry v. Heggie, 79 S. E. 982.

§ 66 (Va.) Whether there has been such a complete and perfect delivery of a deed to the grantee as to vest in him a perfect and indefeasible title to land, or an interest therein, is a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances of the case, and cannot in the majority of instances be declared as a matter of law.—Leftwich v. Early, 79 S. E. 384.

(E) Validity.

§ 68 (N.C.) A deed by a grantor who did not have sufficient mental capacity to execute it was void, and was not rendered valid by its registration prior to the registration of an earlier deed.—Thompson v. Thomas, 79 S. E. 896.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) General Rules of Construction.

§ 90 (N.C.) A deed should be construed most favorably to the grantee.—Outlaw v. Gray, 79 S. E. 676.

§ 94 (Ga.) Where a written agreement was entered into whereby a deed was to be executed upon certain conditions, and subsequently a deed in fee simple was executed, which referred in the preamble to the agreement, and recited that its conditions had been complied with, but contained no such conditions in the habendum clause, the conditions were merged in the deed, and the grantee held the land free therefrom.—Augusta Land Co. v. Augusta Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 138.

§ 97 (N.C.) It is the usual province of the habendum of a deed to define and determine the quantity of the estate, or to explain or qualify the premises, but it cannot be allowed to create an estate entirely repugnant to the interest conveyed in the premises.—Jones v. Whichard, 79 S. E. 503.

Where the premises of a deed, standing alone, conveyed the fee, but the habendum limited the estate to a life estate, they are not to be construed as entirely repugnant, but each is to be used in explanation of the other; and, it being clear that it was only intended to create a life estate, it will be construed accordingly.—Id.

(B) Property Conveyed.

§ 117 (N.C.) Between the vendor and purchaser the common-law rule that whatever is affixed to the freehold becomes a part of it and passes with it is observed in full vigor.—Basnight v. Small, 79 S. E. 269.

(C) Estates and Interests Created.

§ 128 (N.C.) Where land was conveyed to J. and wife for life, "then to their legal bodily heirs provided they leave any, and if not, to be equally divided among my nearest of kin," the word "heirs" not being used in its technical sense, but as meaning children and grandchildren, the fee did not pass to J. and wife under the rule in Shelley's Case.—Jones v. Whichard, 79 S. E. 503.

§ 129 (Ga.) Where a deed conveying land to grantor's daughter, "trustee for her children," gave her the use of the land, but denied her power to sell or incur same, and provided that, if she should have no children living at her death, she could bequeath same as she might desire, and the daughter died leaving a husband and child surviving her, held, that the child took a fee-simple estate in the land to the exclusion of the husband.—Heyward-Williams Co. v. McCall, 79 S. E. 133.

§ 132 (N.C.) Where a husband conveyed land to his wife for life, and at her death to their surviving children, their heirs and assigns forever, the term "surviving children" meant children living at the death of the life tenant and not grandchildren.—Bradshaw v. Stansberry, 79 S. E. 302.

§ 133 (N.C.) Where land was deeded to J. and wife for life, "then to their legal bodily heirs provided they leave any, and if not, to be equally divided among my nearest of kin," the remainder to the heirs was contingent on their being alive when the life estate terminated, and no title could be claimed through heirs who died before the life tenants.—Jones v. Whichard, 79 S. E. 503.

(D) Exceptions and Reservations.

§ 138 (S.C.) While there is a well-defined and established difference between an exception and a reservation in a deed, the use of the word "exception" or "reservation" will not control the manifest intention, as they are often used interchangeably and synonymously.—Marion County Lumber Co. v. Hodges, 79 S. E. 1096.

§ 143 (N.C.) A logging railroad which is a fixture upon the land is not excluded from a conveyance thereof by the fact that the grantor reserved for himself the pine timber upon the tract; it appearing that there was timber of other varieties large enough to cut.—Basnight v. Small, 79 S. E. 269.

(E) Conditions and Restrictions.

§ 166 (Ga.) Where plaintiff, in an action to recover land, relied on a breach of conditions in an agreement made prior to the execution of a deed, which contract was merged in the deed, so that the grantee held the land free from such conditions, the action was properly dismissed on demurrer to the petition.—Augusta Land Co. v. Augusta Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 138.

IV. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

§ 196 (W.Va.) Circumstances of the execution of a deed by a man 88 years old, and feeble in body and mind, held to create a presumption of undue influence on the part of his sons, which presumption could be rebutted only by clear evidence of fair dealing on their part.—Turner v. Hinchman, 79 S. E. 18.

§ 208 (N.C.) On the question of whether a deed was delivered to and accepted by a grantee, the fact that it was produced by the grantee under a notice to him or a rule of the court requiring him to do so might have an important bearing.—Henry v. Heggie, 79 S. E. 982.

§ 208 (Va.) In suit by a husband's heirs against wife to partition land originally owned by the wife, evidence held insufficient to show that a deed by the wife to the husband was ever delivered.—Leftwich v. Early, 79 S. E. 384.

§ 210 (W.Va.) Where the grantee verbally agrees to maintain the grantors and such agreement is properly pleaded and sufficiently proved, it will be deemed the actual consideration, though the deed of grant recites as consideration therefor "one dollar in hand paid."—Cumberledge v. Cumberledge, 79 S. E. 1010.

§ 211 (N. C.) Evidence held to sustain a finding that a deed from defendant to plaintiff for a one-fifth interest in the land was procured by fraud.—Turner v. Davis, 79 S. E. 257.

§ 211 (W.Va.) Evidence held to show that a deed was procured by undue influence exercised upon the grantor by his sons, the grantees.—Turner v. Hinchman, 79 S. E. 18.

§ 64 (Ga.App.) That one set of interrogatories was propounded to two witnesses, each of whom made separate answers, was not ground for rejecting the answers.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Yesbik, 79 S. E. 243.

II. INVOLUNTARY.

§ 58 (Va.) The December rules in the Richmond county circuit court occurring on the 25th of November, process having been returned executed on November 4th, a month did not elapse between the day of the return and the rules, so that the clerk had no power, under Code 1904, §§ 3236, 3241, to dismiss the suit for failure to file the declaration at such rules.—*House v. #### DISORDERLY HOUSE.

§ 17 (Ga.App.) In order to convict in a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, evidence

§ 11 (Va.) It is against public policy to encourage divorce litigation.—Devers v. Devers, 79 S. E. 1048.

II. GROUNDS.

§ 37 (Va.) Where complainant allowed his wife to visit her relations and had himself broken off the correspondence between them, he is not entitled to divorce on the ground of desertion merely because it appeared she stated she would not live with him at the place he had chosen as their home.—Devers v. Devers, 79 S. E. 1048.

§ 37 (W.Va.) The conduct which will justify one spouse in abandoning the other must be inconsistent with their matrimonial relations or render cohabitation unsafe.—Dawkins v. Dawkins, 79 S. E. 822.

IV. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

(B) Parties, Process, and Incidental Proceedings.

§ 79 (Va.) In view of Code 1904, § 2259, fixing the jurisdiction of courts for divorce, a complainant husband held not to have made a showing entitling the court to jurisdiction.—Yates v. Yates, 79 S. E. 1040.

(D) Evidence.

§ 133 (W.Va.) Divorce for desertion and cruelty denied; the grounds therefor not being established by clear and convincing evidence.—Dawkins v. Dawkins, 79 S. E. 822.

(F) Judgment or Decree.

§ 157 (W.Va.) An application, under Code 1906, c. 64, § 13, for absolute divorce, subsequent to a decree of divorce a mensa et thoro, must be by petition or bill averring grounds for relief, and upon the usual process and proceedings at rules for equity practice.—Dixon v. Dixon, 79 S. E. 1016.

(G) Appeal.

§ 184 (Va.) Unless the record on appeal shows that proper constructive service has been had on a nonresident defendant in divorce proceedings, the action of the trial court in dismissing the case for want of jurisdiction will not be disturbed.—Yates v. Yates, 79 S. E. 1040.

V. ALIMONY, ALLOWANCES, AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

§ 256 (Va.) Lien of decree for alimony, granted to a wife, on the lands of the husband, held not to be affected by decree of absolute divorce granted to the husband in another state, even though the foreign court had jurisdiction of the parties.—Isaacs v. Isaacs, 79 S. E. 1072.

VI. CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN.

§ 289 (Ga.) In determining the custody of children on a motion made under Civ. Code 1910, § 2980, pending an action for divorce, the judge is not bound by a previous judgment in habeas corpus between the same parties, and may award such custody in the exercise of his sound discretion; Civ. Code 1910, §§ 2971, 2980, both of which relate to the custody of children and control on this question, being in pari materia and properly construed together.—Zachry v. Zachry, 79 S. E. 115.

§ 2 (N.C.) The drainage act of 1909 (Pub. Laws 1909, c. 442) is not obnoxious to either the state or federal Constitution.—Newby & White v. Board of Drainage Com'rs of Bear Swamp Drainage Dist., 79 S. E. 266.

§ 13 (N.C.) A drainage district organized under Pub. Laws 1909, c. 442, is a quasi municipal corporation, and neither its existence nor the irregularity of its proceedings may be collaterally attacked.—Newby & White v. Board of Drainage Com'rs of Bear Swamp Drainage Dist., 79 S. E. 266.

§ 13 (N.C.) The establishment of levee and drainage districts is a valid exercise of legislative power, based upon the police power, the right of eminent domain, and the taxing power.—Shelton v. White, 79 S. E. 427.

§ 14 (N.C.) Under Laws 1909, c. 442, §§ 16, 17, relating to the formation of drainage districts, any landowner included therein may appeal from the decision of the clerk to the superior court upon the issue as to whether his land will be benefited, and have such issue passed upon by a jury.—Shelton v. White, 79 S. E. 427.

Where, upon hearing of final report of viewers, under Act 1909, c. 442, § 9, relating to formation of drainage districts, a majority of landowners and owners of three-fifths of the land within the proposed district objected, the proceeding should have been dismissed, although some of the objectors signed the original petition for the formation of the district.—Id.

§ 14 (N.C.) Under Laws 1909, c. 442, relating to the formation of drainage districts, and providing for an appeal by any landowner to the superior court upon the issue as to whether his land will be benefited, such issue was by the superior court properly submitted to a jury.—Parker v. Johnson, 79 S. E. 430.

§ 57 (N.C.) Remedies provided by Pub. Laws 1909, c. 442, by which a landowner may recover damages resulting from the construction of drains under the act, are exclusive of all other remedies.—Newby & White v. Board of Drainage Com'rs of Bear Swamp Drainage Dist., 79 S. E. 286.

Plaintiff's predecessors in title having made no claim for damages to land by the construction of a drainage ditch, as they might have done under Pub. Laws 1909, c. 442, § 11, plaintiffs were estopped to maintain an action against drainage commissioners to recover such damage.—Id.

Code 1910, § 442, it is only unlawful for any person to appear in an intoxicated condition on the street, when the intoxication is made manifest by boisterous and indecent conduct, or profane language, and intoxication is not manifested by reckless driving.—Peterson v. State, 79 S. E. 927.

Reckless driving is not within that indecent conduct and action which Pen. Code 1910, § 442, requires as one of the evidences of public intoxication punishable by law.—Id.

§ 11 (Ga.App.) Evidence merely that defendant had whisky in his possession was insufficient to sustain his conviction of drunkenness on church grounds.—Carawell v. State, 79 S. E. 589.

DYING DECLARATIONS.

See Homicide, §§ 207-218.

EASEMENTS.

See Constitutional Law, § 281; Fences, § 1; Municipal Corporations, § 663.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND TERMINATION.

§ 17 (Ga.App.) Where lots are bought and sold with reference to a plat showing certain streets, a person who purchases with reference to the plat acquires such a right in all the streets designated thereon as entitles him to enjoin the obstruction of one such street, even though his lots do not abut upon it.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

II. EXTENT OF RIGHT, USE, AND OBSTRUCTION.

§ 44 (W.Va.) A testator's reservation of a right of way for an outlet over land given one devisee confers no right to the exclusive use of the soil, but creates only an easement, and the way cannot be fenced against the servient tenant's wishes.—Wiley v. Ball, 79 S. E. 659.

The servient tenant cannot be burdened with the occupancy of a greater width than is reasonably necessary for the uses for which the right of way is reserved as an easement, where no width is defined in the reservation.—Id.

§ 61 (Ga.App.) The stopping or impeding of a private way which has been opened and is in use is a private nuisance.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

The summary proceeding provided for by Civ. Code 1910, § 5329 et seq., is not available to remove an obstruction in a private way which exists only on a plat, and has never been opened or used.—Id.

EJECTMENT.

I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 9 (Ga.) Plaintiff in an action for land must recover on the strength of his own title.—Henry v. Roberts, 79 S. E. 115.

§ 9 (N.C.) Plaintiff, in an action to try the title to land, who relies on adverse possession under color of title, must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not merely rely on the weakness of his adversary's title.—Barfield v. Hill, 79 S. E. 677.

§ 12 (W.Va.) Plaintiff in ejectment cannot extend the description in his deed by a reference to a patent or other paper not referred to or adopted in the deed.—Hartmyer v. Everly, 79 S. E. 1093.

§ 15 (S.C.) The rule that plaintiff in ejectment must show a complete and perfect title in himself, going back to a grant either actual or presumed, is subject to the exception that, where both parties claim from a common source, plaintiff need go back no further than such source.—Bethea v. Allen, 79 S. E. 639.

§ 16 (W.Va.) The doctrine that a plaintiff in ejectment may recover merely on the strength of prior possession does not apply, where defendant has acquired possession peaceably and in good faith under claim of title.—Lovett v. West Virginia Central Gas Co., 79 S. E. 1007.

IV. TRIAL, JUDGMENT, ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW.

§ 110 (N.C.) In an action involving the delivery of an unregistered deed, where the court properly charged as to the burden of proof, his refusal to charge that the grantor's possession of the deed was presumptive evidence that it had not been delivered was not error.—Carroll v. Smith, 79 S. E. 497.

In an action involving the delivery of an unregistered deed, where there was evidence of delivery, the court properly charged that possession of the deed by the grantor was a circumstance which the jury might consider.—Id.

ELECTION.

See Wills, § 781.

ELECTIONS.

See Constitutional Law, §§ 9, 68; Schools and School Districts, §§ 97, 103; States, § 115.

V. REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

§ 106 (N.C.) The fact that the registrar of elections did not administer an oath to any of the electors whose names were registered in the register book would not invalidate an election to determine whether a school tax should be levied, in absence of fraud or improper motive.—Gibson v. Board of Com'rs of Scotland County, 79 S. E. 976.

ELECTRICITY.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 1058, 1066; Eminent Domain, § 69; Evidence, § 474; Municipal Corporations, §§ 763, 818, 822, 852.

§ 15 (Va.) Where a child went on the tracks of a motor road, along the poles of which was strung an electric light wire, which had become broken, took hold of the wire, and brought it in contact with the rail, causing a flash which set fire to her clothes, held, that the owner of the road and wire was not liable; the child being a trespasser, or at most a bare licensee.—Kiser v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 348.

§ 19 (Ga.) A petition alleging that plaintiff's son, while moving a house for another, and lifting one of defendant's light wires over the chimney of the house was struck by the rebound of the wire and received a shock, from failure to provide proper insulation, from which he died, and that decedent was in the exercise of ordinary care, held not demurrable.—Sedlmeyer v. City of Fitzgerald, 79 S. E. 469.

ELEVATORS.

See Carriers, §§ 280, 816.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

See Indictment and Information, § 71.

§ 4 (Ga.App.) Where A. is charged with the duty of collecting for B. accounts from C. and D., he cannot be convicted of embezzlement if he pays the entire amount collected from D. to B., though he directs that the amount be applied to the credit of C., though in fact he has not collected anything from C.—Gibson v. State, 79 S. E. 354.

§ 11 (Ga.App.) One cannot be convicted of embezzlement of public funds collected by him in his fiduciary capacity, where they were paid over to the department of the government to which the funds should have been paid, although the payments were made on the wrong account.—Gibson v. State, 79 S. E. 354.

§ 36 (Ga.App.) The state need not prove that accused used any of the appropriated money to buy any particular article.—Trueheart v. State, 79 S. E. 755.

§ 39 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for embezzlement, evidence that accused falsified his account was competent upon the question of criminal intent.—Trueheart v. State, 79 S. E. 755.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

See Constitutional Law, § 281; Drains, § 13; Evidence, §§ 142, 543, 558; Executors and Administrators, § 129; Statutes, §§ 76, 112.

I. NATURE, EXTENT, AND DELEGATION OF POWER.

§ 2 (S.C.) Where a municipal corporation emptied sewage into a stream flowing through plaintiff's land, thus injuring her property, there was a taking of private property for public use within the purview of the Constitution, guaranteeing that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.—Parrish v. Town of Yorkville, 79 S. E. 635.

§ 31 (N.C.) Under Laws 1909, c. 442, §§ 16, 17, relating to the formation of drainage districts, if, on appeal to the superior court by a landowner upon the issue as to whether his lands will be benefited, the jury finds that his lands will not be benefited, they can, nevertheless, be included, if necessary for construction purposes, under the right of eminent domain upon an allowance for damages.—Shelton v. White, 79 S. E. 427.

§ 34 (W.Va.) The rights of the public in the services to be performed by a pipe line company are sufficiently definite and fixed by general law to warrant the taking of a right of way by the company in eminent domain proceedings.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 3.

Where a pipe line company is authorized by general law to take a right of way or easement for its public service, the general law sufficiently protects the rights of the public in respect to the services to be rendered and reasonableness of the charges to be made therefor to warrant the taking thereof for such public use.—Id.

That only a few persons are being served at the time a right of way or easement for a pipe line is proposed to be taken will not defeat the right of the pipe line company to take same, if the real object is to serve the public.—Id.

§ 68 (W.Va.) Where a public service corporation has a public duty to perform, the question of what is necessary in the way of easements and other means of performing the services is generally a matter within its discretion, not controllable by the courts.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 3.

The question of the public need or benefit of a proposed right of way or easement for a pipe line is generally a question for the court, and not one of fact for the jury.—Id.

II. COMPENSATION.

(A) Necessity and Sufficiency in General.

§ 69 (N.C.) A quasi public corporation, such as an electric light company, authorized to place poles and wires along the streets of a city cannot invade the rights of a property owner in respect to trees in the street in front of his property, without paying compensation therefor.—Moore v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 79 S. E. 596.

§ 69 (S.C.) As the Constitution prohibits the taking of private property for a public use without just compensation, the granting by the Legislature of the right to condemn private property imposes upon the condemning corporation the correlative duty of making just compensation.—Parrish v. Town of Yorkville, 79 S. E. 635.

§ 76 (W.Va.) Acts 1907, c. 74 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 42, §§ 18, 20), amending and re-enacting Code 1906, c. 42, §§ 18, 20, and providing for an alternative method of condemning land or easements by pipe line companies, held not violative of Const. art. 3, § 9 (Code 1906, p. 1), prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without just compensation paid or secured to be paid, such requirement being satisfied by a provision for the giving of a bond.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 3.

§§ 79, 80 (Ga.) Where a landowner petitions for a new road, and agrees to give the right of way for same without cost, she cannot subsequently recover damages from the county for the running of the road through her property.—Murray County v. Wilson, 79 S. E. 783.

§§ 79, 80 (Ga.App.) As a waiver is a relinquishment of a known right, plaintiff, an abutting owner, would have to be in possession of all the facts as to how a change of grade would leave his property before his consent to the imrovement would be a waiver of any resulting damage.—City of Americus v. Phillips, 79 S. E. 36.

B) Taking or Injuring Property as Ground for Compensation.

§ 95 (Ga.) The damages recoverable for injuries to land not taken may include any injury caused by the legitimate use of the property taken for the purpose for which condemnation is made.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

§ 96 (Ga.) That the taking of proposed land will destroy the general unity of the condemnor's farm, and depreciate the market value of the land not taken, affords an element of the damages recoverable in proceedings to condemn land for a reservoir.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

§ 98 (Ga.) Where, in proceedings to condemn land for a reservoir, it appears that the proposed raise of the water in the river will prevent the drainage of a part of the condemnor's land not taken, this furnishes an element of the damages recoverable by the condemnor.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

§ 101 (Ga.App.) A city is liable to a property owner for damages from altering the grade of a street or sidewalk in front of his property, whereby his means of ingress and egress are impaired.—City of Americus v. Phillips, 79 S. E. 36.

(C) Measure and Amount.

§ 136 (Ga.) Where it is sought to condemn an easement for a sewer, the landowner can recover damages for the property actually taken, and such damages to the remainder as flow from the construction of the sewer.—Potts v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 110.

II. PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY AND ASSESS COMPENSATION.

§ 167 (S.C.) As condemnation of land by a municipality is statutory in origin, the method prescribed by Civ. Code 1912, § 3023, by which the amount of compensation is to be determined by arbitrators appointed by the corporation and the landowner, is exclusive; there being no common-law action.—Parrish v. Town of Yorkville, 79 S. E. 635.

§ 167 (W.Va.) Acts 1907, c. 74 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 42, §§ 18, 20), amending and re-enacting Code 1906, c. 42, §§ 18, 20, and providing for an alternative method of condemning land or easements by pipe line companies, held valid.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 8.

§ 191 (W.Va.) Petitioner for a right of way or easement taken for a pipe line under authority of Acts 1907, c. 74 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 42, §§ 18, 20), amending and re-enacting Code 1906, §§ 18, 20, need not, when less than the fee is taken, describe a definite width or depth, but must pursue a definite line with courses and distances given, and have a definite and fixed termini.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 8.

§ 202 (Ga.) In condemnation proceedings it was not error to reject the testimony of a witness that under a certain assumption the water owner on the land sought to be condemned ought to pay interest on a certain valuation.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

Where the condemnor's notice included the right to back water on land on which there was a shoal, and he introduced evidence generally as to the value of the land, without referring specifically to whether the shoal had any value for furnishing water power, and where the condemnor introduced evidence of the general value, and also of the value of the shoal, the condemnor was properly permitted to introduce depositions previously taken tending to prove that the shoal had no value.—Id.

§ 203 (Ga.App.) That plaintiff had put down a brick sidewalk in front of his property and had been required to pay for the curbing thereof was admissible to show damages by change in the grade of the street.—City of Americus v. Phillips, 79 S. E. 36.

§ 222 (Ga.) Where, in proceedings to condemn land, the instructions given referred only in general terms to the consequential damages to land not taken, it was error to refuse to instruct on specific damages caused to such land.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

An instruction which repeated several times that the consequential damages recoverable were only such as were proximately caused by the taking held too restricted.—Id.

Where there was no evidence that the use of the condemned land as a part of a pond would render the remainder unhealthy and decrease its market value, a precautionary instruction on this point was improper.—Id.

§ 224 (Ga.) It was not ground for new trial to give instructions which in effect were the same as instructions requested by the condemnor.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

§ 238 (Ga.) Where a municipality seeks to condemn an easement for a sewer, and to appeal from the assessor's award, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5228, the appeal is duly entered on the city's filing in the superior court within the statutory time a bond for the condemnation money, with a recital of the proceedings and of a desire to appeal.—Potts v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 110.

Corporate municipal action is not necessary to authorize such appeal.—Id.

A bond on appeal, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5228, may be executed and an appeal entered by the attorney at law.—Id.

§ 238 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5228, requiring that an appeal from an award of assessors in a condemnation case be filed within 10 days after the award, an appeal entered after the 10 days was properly dismissed.—Edwards v. Savannah & S. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 841.

IV. REMEDIES OF OWNERS OF PROPERTY.

§ 266 (S.C.) Where a municipality has taken private property for public use, but denies the right to compensation, the owner may bring an action in equity to ascertain his right to compensation because Civ. Code 1912, § 3023, which provides for the computation of the amount of compensation, does not provide any method for determining the right to compensation when it is contested.—Parrish v. Town of Yorkville, 79 S. E. 635.

§ 269 (S.C.) As the remedy of condemnation is for the benefit both of the condemning corporation and the owner, a landowner whose property is taken by a municipality as a dumping place for sewage, may, if the right to some compensation is not denied, institute proceedings to compel the assessment of his damage.—Parrish v. Town of Yorkville, 79 S. E. 635.

§ 274 (W.Va.) The taking of private personal property for public use without payment of just compensation therefor may be enjoined.—State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 79 S. E. 834.

§ 275 (Ga.) Evidence, in an action to enjoin a railway company from trespassing by constructing its railway through a tract of land, held to authorize the granting of an interlocutory injunction.—Chattanooga & C. I. Ry. Co. v. Morrison, 79 S. E. 903.

I. JURISDICTION, PRINCIPLES, AND MAXIMS.

(A) Nature, Grounds, Subjects, and Extent of Jurisdiction in General.

§ 11 (W.Va.) A court of equity will not take cognizance of a fraud, working injury as a mere tort.—Swarthmore Lumber Co. v. Parks, 79 S. E. 723.

§ 26 (W.Va.) Code 1906, c. 106, authorizing attachments in equity, confers on courts of equity no jurisdiction as to causes of action ex delicto.—Swarthmore Lumber Co. v. Parks, 79 S. E. 723.

(B) Remedy at Law and Multiplicity of Suits.

§ 48 (Va.) Where an infant servant after leaving the master's service returned at the request of the master, who promised to pay him $400 a year, any wages due the complainant for such services were recoverable by action at law, so that he could not file a bill asking that a court of equity award him such amount.—Starke v. Storm's Ex'r, 79 S. E. 1057.

§ 48 (W.Va.) Equity alone has jurisdiction to enforce the bond of a defaulting cashier according to its real intent and purpose, where the bond names a bank's officers as obligees instead of the bank.—Clark v. Nickell, 79 S. E. 1020.

(C) Principles and Maxims of Equity.

§ 60 (N.C.) He has the better right who was first in point of time.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 64 (N.C.) The law will assist those who are diligent and will not take from them the advantage they have thus acquired and turn it over to those who have been inactive.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 66 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4521, a person seeking equity must do equity, and give effect to all equitable rights of other parties respecting the subject-matter of the suit.—Echols v. Green, 79 S. E. 557.

III. PARTIES AND PROCESS.

§ 114 (W.Va.) A petition filed by a stranger to a cause in equity, asking relief against a defendant therein on new matter contained in such petition, must be filed by leave of court, and must make such defendant a party to it by proper allegation and process, unless waived by appearance or otherwise.—Freeman v. Egnor, 79 S. E. 824.

Where a person files his petition, asking to be admitted as a party defendant in a pending suit in equity, in which no allegation is made naming or referring to him in any way, and in which no relief is prayed against him, and he is admitted as a party defendant, he does not in fact become a party to the cause until he has been made a party by some allegation in the bill as amended.—Id.

IV. PLEADING.

(A) Original Bill.

§ 148 (Va.) "Multifariousness" in a bill means the improper joining therein of distinct and independent matters, as the union of several unconnected matters against one defendant or the demand of several distinct and independent matters against several defendants.—Dennis v. Justus, 79 S. E. 1077.

A bill seeking to set aside a tax deed to one defendant as invalid and to restrain proceedings by another defendant under an ex parte petition before a commissioner under the statute providing for proving recorded papers, to set up title in himself, was bad as being multifarious.—Id.

(B) Plea, Answer, and Disclaimer.

§ 181 (W.Va.) An answer tendered after a final decree has been rendered upon a bill taken for confessed is properly rejected under authority of Code 1906, c. 125, § 53, when not accompanied by affidavits showing good cause for delay.—McDonald v. McDonald Planing Mill Co., 79 S. E. 1081.

§ 181 (W.Va.) An answer in partition, filed after the term has ended at which an appealable decree was rendered, could not raise an issue upon questions determined by the decree.—Wright v. Pittman, 79 S. E. 1091.

(C) Cross-Bill and Plea and Answer Thereto.

§ 196 (W.Va.) While relief against plaintiff may, in certain cases, be given to the defendant on an ordinary answer to a bill in equity, no such relief can be given against a codefendant.—Freeman v. Egnor, 79 S. E. 824.

In order for the defendant, in an action in equity for partition, to obtain relief against a codefendant, resort must be had to a cross-bill, or an answer, under Code 1906, c. 125, § 35, in lieu of a cross-bill.—Id.

(D) Replication.

§ 208 (W.Va.) No special reply to an ordinary answer to a bill in equity, outside the answers under Code 1906, c. 125, § 35, is necessary, and its matter is not taken as true under general replication.—Freeman v. Egnor, 79 S. E. 824.

(E) Amended and Supplemental Pleadings and Reviver.

§ 226 (Va.) The court should dismiss a bill for multifariousness on its own motion though not objected to on that ground by defendant, so that it was immaterial that the demurrer for multifariousness was made by only one of defendants.—Dennis v. Justus, 79 S. E. 1077.

§ 271 (Va.) Where the matter of amendment is similar to that in a bill and was known or might well have been known to complainant, but was not brought forward until after argument, and the demurrer was sustained, the court properly refused to allow it.—Starke v. Storm's Ex'r, 79 S. E. 1057.

X. DECREE AND ENFORCEMENT THEREOF.

§ 427 (W.Va.) To authorize granting one defendant relief against a codefendant, it is not enough that the latter be named as defendant in the bill; but the bill and the answer seeking relief, considered together, must sufficiently raise the issue between such defendants.—Freeman v. Egnor, 79 S. E. 824.

ERROR, WRIT OF.

See Appeal and Error; Contempt, § 66; Costs, § 238; Exceptions, Bill of, § 43.

ESTABLISHMENT.

See Trusts, § 366.

ESTATES.

See Courtesy; Dower; Executors and Administrators; Life Estates; Mines and Minerals, § 55; Perpetuities; Remainders; Tenancy in Common; Wills.

§ 8 (N.C.) Under the rule in Shelley's Case, when a person takes an estate of freehold, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder of an interest of the same quality to his heirs, as a class of persons to take in succession, from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate.—Jones v. Whichard, 79 S. E. 503.

To make the rule in Shelley's Case apply, the word "heirs" or "heirs of the body" must be used in a technical sense carrying the estate to such heirs as a class from generation to generation, and where they are simply intended as a descriptio personarum, or if the estate is conveyed in any other manner than it would descend, the rule does not apply.—Id.

ESTATES TAIL.

See Vendor and Purchaser, § 129.

ESTOPPEL.

II. BY DEED.

(A) Creation and Operation in General.

§ 22 (S.C.) A general recital will not ordinarily furnish the basis for an estoppel.—Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Southern Granite Co., 79 S. E. 985.

§ 25 (S.C.) An estoppel can be invoked only by a party who shows that he was misled to his injury.—Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Southern Granite Co., 79 S. E. 985.

(B) Estates and Rights Subsequently Acquired.

§ 35 (N.C.) Where decedent's widow and daughter partitioned his land, the daughter conveyed her part, and the widow died intestate, the daughter's grantee held to have title by estoppel, whether partition was valid or not.—Holmes v. Carr, 79 S. E. 413.

§ 38 (Ga.) Whatever title the maker of a warranty deed subsequently acquires by payment of purchase money due her grantor will pass to her grantee.—Cowart v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

III. EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

(A) Nature and Essentials in General.

§ 54 (Va.) The doctrine of estoppel in pais is an equitable one, and it cannot be taken advantage of by one claiming to have been influenced by the conduct of another to his injury, who acted with knowledge of the facts relied on as constituting an estoppel.—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

§ 59 (Va.) One whose own acts or fraud induced conduct on the part of another cannot urge such conduct by way of estoppel.—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

(B) Grounds of Estoppel.

§ 67 (N.C.) Where a landlord contracted to buy the tenant's share of a crop of tobacco, the landlord held estopped to insist that the bringing of an action for the tobacco by the tenant and his mortgagee was a rescission of the contract where it was not treated by him as a rescission.—McCullers v. Cheatham, 79 S. E. 306.

(C) Persons Affected.

§ 98 (S.C.) Where property was granted in trust for a woman and her heirs, with power to her of appointment by will, the heirs of one of her children cannot attack a conveyance of a part of the land where their parent was given the proceeds as his share of the property; the remainder being distributed by the beneficiary to other children.—Huggins v. Price, 79 S. E. 798.

EVIDENCE

§ 75 (Ga.App.) Where the means of proving a negative are not within the power of one of the parties, but all the proof on the subject is within the control of the other, who, if the negative is not true, can disprove it at once, the truth of the negative can be presumed from the fact that the opposite party withholds proof to the contrary.—Hyer v. C. E. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 58.

III. BURDEN OF PROOF.

§ 90 (Ga.App.) The meaning of the term "onus probandi" is that, if the party who has the burden of proof does not offer any evidence in the case, the issue must be found against him.—Hyer v. C. E. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 58.

§ 94 (Ga.App.) One who assumes the burden of proof is only required to carry it until his contention has been prima facie established, the term "burden of proof" being coextensive with the legal proposition sought to be proved, applying to every fact essential to or necessarily involved in the proposition, but not to facts relied on in defense. The burden of establishing a case (citing 1 Words & Phrases, 905).—Hyer v. C. E. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 58.

The position of the burden of proof is determined by the pleadings and is unchanging, while the burden of testimony may be shifted and alternate between the parties according to the contingencies and crises of the trial.—Id.

IV. RELEVANCY, MATERIALITY, AND COMPETENCY IN GENERAL.

(B) Res Gestae.

§ 121 (N.C.) Lamm*, 79 S. E. 290.

§ 122 (N.C.) Where the only defense was suicide, statements of insured as to his need of a pistol, made to his wife 8 or 10 months before he was killed, held no part of the res gestae.—Barker v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 424.

(C) Similar Facts and Transactions.

§ 164 (Ga.) Parol evidence of the formal actions of the directors and stockholders of a corporation is ordinarily inadmissible, where the minutes of the corporation have not been pro-

§ 165 (Ga.App.) In an action against a surety, testimony that another note was given in renewal of the note sued on was inadmissible under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 5828, because not the best evidence, where the new note was not produced, and no foundation was laid for the introduction of secondary evidence.—E. Matthews & Son v. Richards, 79 S. E. 227.

§ 178 (Ga.App.) A constable can testify that he posted the advertisement of sale under a justice court fi. fa. as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 4765, and on proof of the loss of such advertisement may testify as to its contents.—Bowman v. Kidd, 79 S. E. 167.

Ewell*, 79 S. E. 509.

(C) By Grantors, Former Owners, or Privies.

§ 236 (Ga.) Bradwell*, 79 S. E. 572.

(E) Proof and Effect.

§ 256 (Ga.) Bradwell*, 79 S. E. 572.

VIII. DECLARATIONS.

(A) Nature, Form, and Incidents in General.

Allen*, 79 S. E. 1.

Allen*, 79 S. E. 1.

§ 317 (N.C.) Where the only defense was suicide, testimony of the insured's wife and beneficiary that some 8 or 10 months before his death insured stated to her that he needed a pistol as deputy sheriff and was thinking of getting one, and a later conversation as to the need of a pistol to protect her in his absence, offered to rebut the theory of suicide, were incompetent as hearsay.—Barker v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 424.

X. DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

(B) Exemplifications, Transcripts, and Certified Copies.

§ 342 (W.Va.) A copy of a Virginia grant, certified by the auditor of West Virginia or the register of the Virginia land office, is admissible as evidence of title, though it does not indicate that the grant bore a seal; a presumption that the original was under seal arising from the recordation thereof and the recital that the Governor had affixed the seal.—William James' Sons Co. v. Crouch, 79 S. E. 815.

(C) Private Writings and Publications.

§ 354 (Ga.App.) That a book is kept in ledger form is not a valid objection to its admission as a book of original entries, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5769.—Harper v. V. Hammond & Sons, 79 S. E. 44.

If a book offered in evidence was not a book of original entries, it was properly admitted in corroboration of admission by defendant that he was indebted to plaintiff in an amount proximately the same as that shown by the book.—Id.

§ 405 (N.C.) An insurer may show that the manual delivery of a policy was conditional, or it may prove fraud or other equitable matter to show that such policy never took effect; but, when it is once delivered, statements therein which, if falsified, would affect its continued validity cannot be contradicted to avoid the insurance.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

§ 413 (S.C.) In an action by a railroad company on an insurance policy covering loss by fire of cotton for which it was liable as a common carrier, evidence of an agreement between the carrier and the shippers, whereby the carrier became liable as a common carrier for cotton, is admissible, not tending to modify the contract of insurance.—Bennettville & C. R. Co. v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 717.

(B) Invalidating Written Instrument.

§ 429 (Ga.App.) Parol evidence of a verbal promise, alleged to have been part of the consideration of a note, is properly excluded, where the effect of such promise would completely defeat the note, and there is no contention that the promise was omitted from the note through fraud, accident, or mistake.—Thomson v. McLaughlin, 79 S. E. 182.

§ 431 (N.C.) In an action on a written contract ordering goods, oral evidence is admissible to prove that the contract was left with the salesman on condition that he should not send it in until he had further instructions from the buyer.—Blackstad Mercantile Co. v. Parker & Glover, 79 S. E. 606.

§ 431 (Va.) While parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a deed perfect on its face was delivered to the grantee on condition, this rule does not control where the question is whether there was such a complete and perfect delivery as to vest in the grantee a perfect and indefeasible title.—Leftwich v. Early, 79 S. E. 384.

§ 432 (Ga.App.) Parol evidence is admissible to show want of consideration for a note.—Herring v. First Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 359.

§ 434 (Ga.) In an action on a note given for stock of a corporation, evidence that defendant was induced to sign the note by false statements of the agents of the payee as to the finances of the corporation and the personnel of its directors was not objectionable on the theory that the evidence failed to show fraud, and tended to vary the terms of a written contract.—Bank of Lavonia v. Bush, 79 S. E. 450.

§ 434 (Ga.App.) A promise to do certain acts or perform certain services, made to induce the execution of a promissory note, though made with no intention of performance, is not such a fraud as will authorize the admission of parol evidence thereof to vary the terms of a note which contains no such stipulation.—Thomson v. McLaughlin, 79 S. E. 182.

* An independent promise to do certain acts, or perform certain services, made to the maker of an unconditional note to induce him to sign it, though made with no intention of performance, is not such a fraud as authorizes the admission of parol evidence to vary the terms of the note.—Id.

(C) Separate or Subsequent Oral Agreement.

§ 441 (Ga.) In a landowner's action against a county for damages for the running of a road through her property, plaintiff's oral testimony that she signed an agreement to give the right of way for the road because she was told the road would run on a different route from that alleged was inadmissible.—Murray County v. Wilson, 79 S. E. 783.

E. R. Co. v. Baxter*, 79 S. E. 187.

§ 441 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action on a note given for the price of mules, it appeared that the written contract of sale contained no express warranty, and the answer did not state that its execution was procured by fraud, a plea contradicting the terms of the written contract, by setting up an oral warranty as to the age of the mules, was properly stricken.—Harrison v. Lee, 79 S. E. 211.

§ 441 (Ga. App.) Under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 4279, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a blank indorsement on a promissory note was intended as an indorsement without recourse.—E. Matthews & Son v. Richards, 79 S. E. 227.

O'Brien*, 79 S. E. 369.

§ 441 (Va.) In an action on a fire policy, parol evidence that the written application did not contain some of the terms found therein at the time the insured's agent signed it is inadmissible, being an attempt to vary a written instrument by parol evidence.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Turner, 79 S. E. 1067.

provided it does not materially vary or contradict that which is written.—Wilson v. Scarborough, 79 S. E. 811.

§ 443 (Ga.App.) Where, in a suit on a note, defendant pleaded that it was the note of a firm from which he had retired, and that he had sold his interest to plaintiff and another under a contract binding them to pay the debts of the firm of which the note was a part, evidence that plaintiffs contracted to pay $35,000 of the debts of the old firm on purchase of defendant's interest, and that all the books of the firm had been turned over to plaintiffs, was not objectionable as parol evidence to show the terms of a written contract.—Hyer v. C. E. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 58.

§ 445 (Ga.App.) The parol evidence rule will not exclude evidence of the waiver of a stipulation of a contract, where such waiver is subsequent to execution of the contract.—Elyea-Austell Co. v. Jackson Garage, 79 S. E. 88.

§ 460 (N.C.) Where a corner referred to in a deed was established by the parties at the time it was executed, parol evidence is admissible to show at what particular place the corner was established; such evidence being always admissible when there is latent ambiguity in boundaries.—Allison v. Kenion, 79 S. E. 1110.

§ 461 (Ga.App.) The parol evidence rule is not violated by the introduction of extraneous circumstances illustrating the mutual intention of both parties to the covenant in a deed, where the language employed in the covenant leaves such intention in doubt.—Reidville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

§ 461 (W.Va.) Where a call for an adjoining tract as a boundary of leased premises contains a clear description of the premises, an intent of the lessor not to lease part of the land included therein cannot be shown by parol.—Reserve Gas Co. v. Carbon Black Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 1002.

XII. OPINION EVIDENCE.

(A) Conclusions and Opinions of Witnesses in General.

§ 471 (N.C.) It was error to refuse to permit a witness, who had operated railroad engines and had much experience in observing how far sparks would fly from them, to testify how far sparks would be thrown, since this was not opinion evidence but a statement of a fact by a person qualified to so testify.—Watkins v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 273.

§ 474 (N.C.) The superintendent of a city's light department during a period of two or three years, though disclaiming to be an expert, could testify that he had received a 110-volt electric shock and it was not deadly, and that he had examined a certain transformer and it was all right, as these were matters of personal experience and observation.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

§ 474 (S.C.) In an action by a shipper for damages for the refusal of an interstate carrier to transport goods at the rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the shipper, who knew the market value of the goods at the point of destination, both by reason of his own visits there and communications, may testify as to their market value.—Aldrich v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 316.

§ 501 (Ga.App.) A witness may give his opinion upon facts which he details.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

(C) Competency of Experts.

§ 543 (Ga.) A witness, who testified that he was in the electric light business and acquainted with the operation of an electric plant and the value of waterworks, that he had been general manager of an electric light business for seven years, and that he was familiar with water powers on the river in question and had seen the land sought to be condemned, held competent to testify as to value in proceedings to condemn land for a reservoir in connection with the furnishing of electricity to the public.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

A witness, who testified that he had charge of a city light and water plant, but was unfamiliar with the use of water power for electric purposes, and had never bought or sold water power, or constructed a power plant or dam, did not qualify himself to testify as an expert to the value of a water power sought to be condemned.—Id.

(D) Examination of Experts.

§ 548 (N.C.) In a personal injury action, evidence by a medical expert that the muscles in the region of the stomach were rigid is competent as substantive evidence, being the result of a physical examination and the statement of a fact.—Cooper v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 418.

The opinion of a medical expert based upon an examination and statements of the party injured was competent when the examination was made in order to become a witness.—Id.

§ 558 (Ga.) Where a witness testified that the land sought to be condemned was of a certain value, it was too general a question on cross-examination to ask him, "You know where this [designated] place is that sold at $4 an acre, right down there next to you?"—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

XIII. EVIDENCE AT FORMER TRIAL OR IN OTHER PROCEEDING.

§ 576 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5858 (pars. 1, 4), and section 5867, relative to the competency of witnesses, where plaintiff was incompetent to testify as to conversations with a person since deceased, and another person testified as to the same, and plaintiff died, leaving such witness as an heir, and later the witness died, the evidence of such witness at the former trial was admissible at a new trial, where plaintiff's administrator was substituted as plaintiff.—Banks v. Bradwell, 79 S. E. 572.

XIV. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

§ 590 (N.C.) While the testimony of an interested witness who is not biased by his interest is entitled to the same weight as if he was not interested, such evidence is not necessarily entitled to the same weight as that of any other witness, as there may be other circumstances affecting the relative credibility of the witnesses.—In re Smith's Will, 79 S. E. 977.

§ 596 (Ga.) Trover is a civil action, so that plaintiff is only required to establish her cause of action by preponderance of the evidence, and not beyond a reasonable doubt, as provided by Civ. Code 1910, § 5730, though defendant acquired possession by a crime.—Brothers v. Horne, 79 S. E. 468.

EXAMINATION.

See Evidence, §§ 548, 558; Witnesses, §§ 226-297.

EXCEPTIONS.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 260-270, 502; Certiorari, §§ 54, 70; Criminal Law, §§ 1058, 1059; Deeds, §§ 138, 143; New Trial, § 81.

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 299, 490, 518, 522, 534, 548, 627, 628, 763; Criminal Law, §§ 1023, 1092; Municipal Corporations, § 917.

I. NATURE, FORM, AND CONTENTS IN GENERAL.

§ 23 (W.Va.) A skeleton bill of exceptions, including the stenographer's transcript by any designation making its identification reasonably certain, is sufficient.—Cable Co. v. Mathers, 79 S. E. 1079.

II. SETTLEMENT, SIGNING, AND FILING.

§ 36 (Ga.) Errors in interlocutory orders, not excepted to pendente lite, cannot be assigned for review by a bill of exceptions to the overruling of a motion for new trial, where such bill is certified more than 30 days after the adjournment of the court in which such interlocutory orders were passed and rulings made.—Hurt v. Barnes, 79 S. E. 775.

§ 43 (Ga.App.) The Court of Appeals is without jurisdiction over a writ of error in a case where the bill of exceptions was not filed in the lower court within 15 days from the date of the certificate of the judge, as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 6167.—Houston v. Strachan & Co., 79 S. E. 495, following Foote & Davies Co. v. Evans Furniture Co., 72 S. E. 1098.

§ 43 (Ga.App.) Where the bill of exceptions was not tendered until after the expiration of 30 days from the judgment, and it did not appear that the court remained in session more than 30 days, the writ of error will be dismissed.—Johnson v. Georgia Fertilizer & Oil Co., 79 S. E. 1131.

EXECUTION.

See Bankruptcy, § 421; Constitutional Law, § 306; Corporations, § 479; Deeds, §§ 45, 196; Taxation, §§ 545, 569, 746; Wills, §§ 120, 123.

I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

§ 2 (Ga.) While, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5969, the party causing an execution to be issued may assign the same, a sheriff cannot transfer an execution to a third person, from whom he has received the amount of same, to enable him to claim proceeds of a sale under a prior execution.—C. L. Hardwick & Co. v. Cash, 79 S. E. 532.

Where a sheriff had in his hands money from a sale of personalty under an attachment, and a rule was brought against him by a third person, claiming the money as transferee under a prior execution, transferred to him in consideration of his paying the amount thereof and the transfer was made by the sheriff without authority from the plaintiff in execution, held, that this was a settlement of the execution, and that the transferee had no rights thereunder.—Id.

II. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION.

§ 31 (Ga.) Every legal interest in real and personal property can be seized and sold under execution.—James G. Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Chamberlin-Johnson-Du Bose Co., 79 S. E. 465.

IV. LIEN, LEVY OR EXTENT, AND CUSTODY OF PROPERTY.

§ 129 (Ga.App.) It is essential to a valid levy upon personalty that there be an actual or constructive seizure.—Russell v. State, 79 S. E. 485.

The mere posting of a notice on a mound of dirt supposed to contain potatoes held insufficient to constitute a valid levy upon the potatoes, where the officer did not see them, or reduce them to possession, and merely estimated their quantity; it being essential to a valid levy that there be an actual or constructive seizure.—Id.

§ 155 (Ga.App.) Where the value of property levied on does not exceed the amount of the judgment, plaintiff in execution has such an interest in a forthcoming bond as authorizes suit on the bond to be brought in his name, under Civ. Code 1910, § 3729.—Bowman v. Kidd, 79 S. E. 167.

V. STAY, QUASHING, VACATING, AND RELIEF AGAINST EXECUTION.

§ 167 (Ga.) An affidavit of illegality, attacking an execution for the cost of repaving a sidewalk, held not a sufficiently direct and affirmative allegation that the city council took fraudulent action in the matter, and hence it was insufficient to raise an issue which the court was bound to submit to the jury.—Wallace v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 554.

§ 168 (Ga.) An order dismissing an affidavit of illegality of a judgment, which order was entered in vacation without the notice required by Civ. Code 1910, § 4853, or pursuant to an order entered in term time, under section 4854, is void.—Kelly v. Whitley, 79 S. E. 472.

§ 177 (Ga.App.) Where an execution against two persons was levied on personalty in the possession of one who filed an affidavit of illegality, and gave a forthcoming bond, it was a good defense to an action on the bond that the issue made by the affidavit was adjudicated in claimant's favor.—Brown Guano Co. v. Coker, 79 S. E. 582.

In an action on a bond for the forthcoming of property levied on under execution, plaintiff must prove a breach of the bond, and that such breach has damaged him.—Id.

VI. CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS.

§ 194 (Ga.App.) In a claim case, evidence held to authorize a finding that title to the property levied on was in defendant in execution at the date of the levy.—Smith v. D. Rothschild & Co., 79 S. E. 88.

§ 195 (Ga.App.) Where claimant denies that defendant in execution was in possession at the time of levy, plaintiff in fi. fa. is entitled to the opening and close.—Smith v. D. Rothschild & Co., 79 S. E. 88.

§ 199 (Ga.App.) Where property levied on as that of a husband is claimed by the wife, and the main issue is whether the wife's claim is collusive, and the jury find that it is, they can assess damages under Civ. Code 1910, § 5169, on the ground that the claim was filed for delay.—Smith v. D. Rothschild & Co., 79 S. E. 88.

§ 204 (Ga.) Where a claimant disposes of property secured by giving a forthcoming bond, he is not entitled to file a second claim thereon, upon the original claim being withdrawn or dismissed, though the property has not been re-advertised; and the prosecution of an action on the bond will not be enjoined.—Reynolds Banking Co. v. Southern Pacific Guano Co., 79 S. E. 132.

§ 207 (Ga.) Where a claimant gives a forthcoming bond, his failure to deliver the property to the sheriff at the time and place of sale is a breach of the bond.—Reynolds Banking Co. v. Southern Pacific Guano Co., 79 S. E. 132.

§ 210 (Ga.) Where a claimant gives a forthcoming bond, and takes possession and disposes of the property, the sheriff is not required to readvertise as a condition precedent to suing upon the bond.—Reynolds Banking Co. v. Southern Pacific Guano Co., 79 S. E. 132.

VII. SALE.

(A) Manner, Conduct, Validity, and Confirming or Vacating.

§ 219 (N.C.) The sheriff in selling property under execution acts as the agent of both parties, charged with the duty, on one hand, of producing a satisfaction of the writ, and on the other, of causing no needless injury or sacrifice, and is therefore given a discretion with respect to the mode of sale.—Williams v. Chas. F. Dunn & Sons Co., 79 S. E. 512.

§ 221 (N.C.) The sheriff in selling property under execution acts as the agent of both parties charged with the duty, on one hand, of producing a satisfaction of the writ, and on the other, of causing no needless injury or sacrifice, and is therefore given a discretion with respect to the time.—Williams v. Chas. F. Dunn & Sons Co., 79 S. E. 512.

§ 222 (Ga.App.) The advertisement of sale under execution held to sufficiently comply with Civ. Code 1910, § 6062, as against objections that it named no defendant, and stated that the property would be sold by sample and subsequently delivered where located as stated in the advertisement.—Brown Guano Co. v. Coker, 79 S. E. 582.

§ 249 (N.C.) Sale of three lots under execution en masse, with attendant circumstances of fraud and irregularity on the part of the judgment creditor, held to render the sale void, and hence it was properly set aside on motion.—Williams v. Chas. F. Dunn & Sons Co., 79 S. E. 512.

§ 251 (N.C.) Where property is sold under execution en masse or in bulk, when it could reasonably be sold in parcels without prejudice to the parties, and there is any fraud or oppression, or even unfairness whereby it is sold at a disadvantage to the debtor, the sale may be avoided by him in a direct proceeding.—Williams v. Chas. F. Dunn & Sons Co., 79 S. E. 512.

§ 253 (N.C.) A motion to set aside an execution sale is not a new proceeding, but a motion in the original cause and the title of the original action should be retained instead of entitling it as though the moving party was plaintiff, and the purchaser a defendant.—Williams v. Chas. F. Dunn & Sons Co., 79 S. E. 512.

§ 258 (N.C.) Failure to advertise a sale under execution and serve a copy of the advertisement, as required by Revisal 1905, §§ 641, 642, does not render the sale void or open to collateral attack as against an innocent purchaser.—Williams v. Chas. F. Dunn & Sons Co., 79 S. E. 512.

XI. EXECUTION AGAINST THE PERSON.

§ 425 (N.C.) Where complaint alleged a cause for arrest, and the jury found the facts as alleged, judgment held to have made the findings a part thereof, with sufficient certainty and formality for the issuance of an execution against the person.—Turlington v. Aman, 79 S. E. 1102.

Under Revisal 1908, § 625 (Code, § 447, as amended by Acts 1891, c. 541), to justify a body execution, there must be a finding by the jury of the cause for arrest relied on.—Id.

§ 433 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1908, § 625, a motion to insert in a judgment an order that plaintiff was entitled to a body execution held properly denied as premature; his remedy being by motion before the clerk upon return unsatisfied of a property execution.—Turlington v. Aman, 79 S. E. 1102.

Where upon the return of an execution against property unsatisfied, the clerk refuses a body execution in a proper case, the judgment creditor may appeal and have the clerk's decision reviewed.—Id.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See Appearance, § 25; Cancellation of Instruments, §§ 34, 35; Evidence, § 314; Wills.

II. APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE.

§ 17 (S.C.) Under Civ. Code 1912, § 3605, first entitling the husband or wife of decedent to be appointed as administrator, and secondly, if there be no husband or wife or if they do not apply, then the children or their legal representative, and fourth the brother of decedent, the guardian of minor children was properly appointed administrator over decedent's brother, where the widow withdrew her application for letters and asked that the guardian be appointed.—In re Brown's Estate, 79 S. E. 791.

§ 29 (S.C.) Where the probate court has jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, the appointment cannot be collaterally attacked.—In re Brown's Estate, 79 S. E. 791.

§ 35 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4010, counsel fees and expenses, incurred by an administrator with the will annexed in defending a proceeding by certain legatees to revoke his letters for mismanagement, which proceedings are voluntarily discontinued, are chargeable against the general estate.—Armstrong v. Boyd, 79 S. E. 780.

Where the conduct of an administrator causes an heir to sue to revoke the letters of administration, the administrator is not entitled to charge counsel fees, but where he is merely charged with misconduct, and not guilty thereof, he should, under Civ. Code 1910, § 4010, be allowed a reasonable amount to retain counsel in defending the suit.—Id.

IV. COLLECTION AND MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE.

(A) In General.

§ 111 (Ga.) Where an executor under a will probated in common form is called upon by heirs to probate it in solemn form, he is entitled to an allowance from the estate for reasonable attorney's fees, though the will may be refused probate.—Davison v. Sibley, 79 S. E. 855.

Where an executor in bad faith and in fraud of the rights of the heirs attempts to probate a will, he is not entitled to reimbursement from the estate for expenses thereby incurred, though the counsel employed act in good faith and are ignorant of the executor's fraudulent intent.—Id.

§ 122 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3935-3938, a temporary administrator may enjoin a railroad company from unlawfully seizing a portion of the estate for a right of way, though he cannot recover damages for what has already been done.—Chattanooga & C. I. Ry. Co. v. Morrison, 79 S. E. 903.

(B) Real Property and Interests Therein.

§ 129 (Ga.) A beneficiary's agreement that a railway company may, pending condemnation proceedings, construct its railway across the land in which she has an interest is not conclusive upon her as administratrix of the estate, where she is not the sole beneficiary.—Chattanooga & C. I. Ry. Co. v. Morrison, 79 S. E. 903.

§ 130 (Ga.) In trespass by an administrator with the will annexed of the estate of one who died in 1847, evidence held insufficient to show that the administrator was entitled to the possession of the land, for the cutting of timber from which the action was brought.—Hodges v. Stuart Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 462.

VI. ALLOWANCE AND PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

(A) Liabilities of Estate.

§ 221 (Ga.App.) Where an executrix pleaded a conveyance of property by her testator as a settlement of a claim against him, but there was no evidence that a deed, reciting love and affection and the payment of $10 as the consideration, was intended as a settlement of the debt, it was error to admit in evidence the deed or the title of testator to the land.—Wardlaw v. Frederick, 79 S. E. 523.

A written agreement between an executrix and a claimant against the estate, which recited that the claimant claimed a certain sum without interest, which claim was not prejudiced by the agreement, is not admissible as an agreement not to claim interest, or as an estoppel from claiming interest.—Id.

VIII. SALES AND CONVEYANCES UNDER ORDER OF COURT.

(E) Proceeds.

§ 402 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4029, plaintiff was entitled to have his mortgage paid from the proceeds derived from an administrator's sale of the mortgaged property.—Moughon v. Masterson, 79 S. E. 561.

X. ACTIONS.

§ 444 (Ga.App.) In view of Civ. Code 1910, § 5690, authorizing pleadings to be amended to show the representative capacity of a party, where the petition in an action by two individuals described plaintiffs in the first paragraph as administrators and set forth facts showing that defendant was indebted to the estate, it sufficiently showed, in the absence of a special demurrer, that plaintiffs were suing in their representative capacity.—Peavy v. Sangster, 79 S. E. 215.

§ 444 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff sues in his individual capacity, and title in the damaged property is alleged to be in him, an amendment merely adding the words "as administrator of" A. will not entitle him to recover as administrator, where neither the petition nor the amendment alleges that the title was in the decedent named, and that such person is dead, and plaintiff his administrator.—Leathers v. Raburn, 79 S. E. 946.

§ 449 (Ga.App.) Where the answer admitted that plaintiffs were administrators as alleged in the petition, it was not necessary for them to prove such fact.—Peavy v. Sangster, 79 S. E. 215.

XI. ACCOUNTING AND SETTLEMENT.

(B) Proceedings for Accounting.

§§ 473, 474 (Ga.) In a legatee's proceeding under Civ. Code 1910, § 5417, for an accounting, the other legatees, though not necessary parties, may be permitted to intervene to contest the moving legatee's claim against the estate dependent upon the construction of the will.—Havvy v. Moore, 79 S. E. 772.

EXTRADITION.

See Habeas Corpus, §§ 85, 92, 110.

II. INTERSTATE.

§ 39 (S.C.) When extradition papers are regular on their face, every intendment is to be indulged in favor of their validity, and the burden is on the prisoner to show that the statutes have not been complied with.—Ex parte Massee, 79 S. E. 97.

FACTORS.

See Brokers.

§ 23 (Ga.App.) Where a cotton factor has advanced large sums on cotton shipments, so that his interest in the cotton equals or exceeds that of the owner, he may exercise his discretion as to the time of selling the cotton even in disregard of the owner's instructions, providing he acts with due regard both to his own interest and that of the owner.—John Flannery Co. v. James, 79 S. E. 912.

§ 46 (Ga.App.) Evidence in a cotton broker's action against the owner of cotton for commissions and charges, wherein the defense was that plaintiff negligently failed to comply with selling instructions, held sufficient to show that the factor was guilty of neglect of his duty to the owner through violation of his instructions.—John Flannery Co. v. James, 79 S. E. 912.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

I. CIVIL LIABILITY.

(A) Acts Constituting False Imprisonment and Liability Therefor.

§ 7 (Ga.) A clerk of a superior court issuing an attachment for the sheriff under Civ. Code 1895, § 4774 (Civ. Code 1910, § 5346), as for contempt in failing to pay over money in his hands, the attachment being issued under an order absolute made by the judge of the superior court, was not liable to the sheriff for false imprisonment on the sheriff being discharged in habeas corpus proceedings.—Butler v. Tattnell Bank, 79 S. E. 456.

Where a sheriff was arrested under an attachment issued in pursuance of an order absolute under Civ. Code 1895, § 4774 (Civ. Code 1910, § 5346), for contempt in failing to pay over money in his hands, a bank directing the arrest to be made and a sheriff of an adjoining county making the arrest were not liable in damages as for false imprisonment after discharge of defendant in habeas corpus proceedings; no bad faith being alleged against either of them.—Id.

(B) Actions.

§ 39 (N.C.) Whether plaintiff's arrest without a warrant as an alleged aider in the production of an immoral show was justifiable held for the jury.—Brewer v. Wynne, 79 S. E. 629.

FALSE PRETENSES.

See Bankruptcy, § 420.

§ 7 (S.C.) An indictment charging that accused obtained a horse from a prosecuting witness by falsely pretending that another horse was sound in every respect, with intent to cheat and defraud the prosecuting witness, held to state facts constituting a crime, under Cr. Code 1912, § 220.—State v. Stone, 79 S. E. 108.

§ 49 (S.C.) Evidence held sufficient to support a conviction for obtaining goods by false pretenses in connection with a horse trade.—State v. Stone, 79 S. E. 108.

§ 12 (Ga.App.) Where a person, to whom a certificate of stock was issued, altered the same by raising the figures as to the number of shares for which it purported to be issued, and signed his name to the blank for transfer of the certificate and negotiated the same with a bank, he was guilty of uttering a forged instrument, though the date and the name of the transferee were not inserted.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 16 (Ga.App.) The words "pass or tender" are synonymous with the words "utter and publish." If the accused "uttered" a forged instrument, he "published" it. If he "passed" it, he "uttered and published" it. And if it be "uttered" and "published" and "passed," it necessarily was "tendered."—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 48 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for forgery, an instruction that if accused "fraudulently uttered, published, passed or tendered" the paper described in the indictment, he should be convicted, was not erroneous, though the indictment did not employ the words "pass or tender"; the words used in the instruction being those employed in Pen. Code 1910, § 245.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

I. DECEPTION CONSTITUTING FRAUD, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 11 (N.C.) When a party to a bargain knowingly makes false assertions as to the value of the property as an inducement to the trade, and these are accepted and reasonably relied on, they constitute an actionable wrong.—Pate v. Blades, 79 S. E. 608.

§ 13 (N.C.) One who intentionally asserts a fact to be true of his own knowledge, when he does not know whether it is true or false, is as culpable, in case another is thereby misled or injured, as one who makes an assertion which he knows to be untrue.—Pate v. Blades, 79 S. E. 608.

§ 20 (Ga.App.) A false statement is not fraudulent, when there is no reason why it should be believed and relied upon.—Thomson v. McLaughlin, 79 S. E. 182; Harrison v. Lee, Id. 211.

II. ACTIONS.

(B) Parties and Pleading.

§ 41 (Va.) Fraud must be clearly alleged and proved, as every presumption is in favor of innocence and not of guilt.—Dickenson v. Ramsey, 79 S. E. 1025.

(C) Evidence.

III. PROMISES TO ANSWER FOR DEBT, DEFAULT OR MISCARriage OF ANOTHER.

§ 18 (Ga.) The acceptance of a deed obligating the grantee to pay purchase money owing by the grantor created an agreement to pay such price, which was not within the statute of frauds.—Coward v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

§ 21 (Va.) The agreement of one of several joint accommodation indorsers of a note, whereby he induced the others to join in the indorsement, that he would indemnify the others in case of default of the maker of the note, is not within the statute of frauds (Code 1904, § 2840), as an undertaking to answer for the debt or default of another.—Alpha v. Lowman, 79 S. E. 1029.

§ 32 (Ga.) A third person's agreement to pay the amount of the debt, upon the creditor's releasing the debtor and agreeing that such third person shall be substituted for the debtor, held not within the statute of frauds.—Harris v. Jones, 79 S. E. 841.

VII. SALES OF GOODS.

(C) Giving Earnest or Part Payment.

§ 95 (Ga.App.) Under the statute of frauds (Civ. Code 1910, § 3222, par. 7), the approval of a principal, when required to complete a sale made by his agent, must be in writing, where the price exceeds $50, though the buyer pays the agent $1 as part of purchase price.—City Drug Co. v. American Soda Fountain Co., 79 S. E. 376.

VIII. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF WRITING.

§ 103 (Va.) A letter signed by the vendor of land stating that she would accept the offer made by complainant is a sufficient memorandum to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Croghan v. Worthington Hardware Co., 79 S. E. 1039.

§ 104 (N.C.) Where long subsequent to a parol contract to convey land a written agreement to the same effect was executed, this was a sufficient memorandum within the statute of frauds requiring contracts concerning land to be in writing.—Winslow v. White, 79 S. E. 258.

§ 111 (S.C.) A combined crop lien and chattel mortgage, given to secure future advances of supplies and money, which did not specify the kind, quantity, or price of the goods to be furnished was not a sufficient writing to satisfy the statute of frauds for the subsequent oral sale of supplies by the mortgagee to the mortgagor.—Rigby v. Gaymon, 79 S. E. 518.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

See Appeal and Error, § 1178.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES AND PURCHASERS.

(A) Original Parties.

§ 172 (N.C.) The heirs of a grantor cannot sue to set aside a deed executed by him with intent to defraud his creditors, and as to them the grantee acquired a good title.—Pierce v. Stallings, 79 S. E. 302.

III. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS.

(F) Pleading.

§ 269 (W.Va.) A fraudulent conveyance will not be set aside on proof alone without an attack by proper pleading.—McDonald v. McDonald Planing Mill Co., 79 S. E. 1081.

(G) Evidence.

§ 277 (W.Va.) In an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, payment of an adequate consideration is an affirmative defense to be established by clear proof.—Bland v. Rigby, 79 S. E. 1013.

§ 300 (W.Va.) To sustain the claim of payment of adequate consideration in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the grantee's testimony, if uncorroborated, must be clear and consistent with other testimony offered by him.—Bland v. Rigby, 79 S. E. 1013.

FUTURE ADVANCES.

See Mortgages, § 114.

FUTURES.

See Gaming, §§ 12, 49.

GAMING.

See Criminal Law, § 493.

I. GAMBLING CONTRACTS AND TRANSACTIONS.

(A) Nature and Validity.

§ 12 (N.C.) In an action for breach of contract for the sale of cotton for future delivery, the buyer cannot recover if the contract was entered into without any expectation of a delivery.—Holt v. Wellons, 79 S. E. 450.

(B) Rights and Remedies of Parties.

§ 49 (N.C.) In an action by the buyer for breach of a contract for the sale of cotton for future delivery, claimed by the seller to be a gambling contract, the buyer's testimony that the seller had asked to be notified if the buyer ever wanted any cotton was admissible, as it tended, if only slightly, to show that an actual delivery of the cotton was intended.—Holt v. Wellons, 79 S. E. 450.

Under the direct provisions of Revisal 1905, §§ 1689-1691, where the defendant alleges in his answer that the cause of action is founded upon a contract for the sale of cotton for future delivery, entered into without any actual delivery being intended, the burden is upon the plaintiff to show that the contract is lawful in its nature and purposes.—Id.

III. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(A) Offenses.

§ 71 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for gaming it is not error to charge that, if accused played and bet for money as alleged, it is immaterial whose money it was or who put up the money with which he played.—Kincaid v. State, 79 S. E. 770.

§ 75 (Ga.App.) One who permits others to assemble in a room under his control and play any game of chance at which anything of value is hazarded, is guilty of keeping a gaming house, within Pen. Code 1910, § 389, regardless of his object in permitting the game.—Alexander v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 177.

GARAGES.

See Livery Stable Keepers; Master and Servant, § 302.

GARNISHMENT.

See Trial, § 253.

II. PERSONS AND PROPERTY SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT.

§ 42 (Ga.App.) A debt due by an attorney cannot be collected by garnishment of a debtor of one of his clients, though the attorney as a result of his services may have a contingent interest in the debt.—Modlin v. Smith, 79 S. E. 82.

The debtor of a client does not become the debtor of the client's attorney, because, under the terms of his employment the lawyer will be entitled to a stipulated portion of the recovery as his fee, so as to render such portion subject to garnishment.—Id.

VI. PROCEEDINGS TO SUPPORT OR ENFORCE.

§ 158 (Ga.App.) Merely exhibiting to a party or his counsel a traverse of an answer of garnishment when it is filed is not such notice of traverse to the garnishee as is contemplated by Civ. Code 1910, § 5287, requiring such notice to be served in person or by leaving same at garnishee's abode.—Vaughan v. Bank of Cobbtown, 79 S. E. 1130.

§ 191 (W.Va.) A garnishee may, when the debtor is served with process or defends the action, disregard any irregularity, but otherwise he pays a judgment against him at his peril, and therefore is allowed to charge the funds in his hands to the extent necessary to test the validity of the proceedings.—Bank of Union v. Baird, 79 S. E. 738.

VIII. CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS.

§ 210 (Ga.) The dissolution of a garnishment by a person not a party to the proceeding, authorized by Civ. Code 1910, § 5282, discharges the garnishee from further liability upon the filing of a dissolution bond.—First Nat. Bank v. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 79 S. E. 781.

Since the Garnishment Statutes (Civ. Code 1910, §§ 5282, 5283, 5289) do not authorize a partial dissolution of a garnishment, the privilege given under section 5282 to a stranger to the suit to dissolve the garnishment by bond does not entitle a claimant to only a portion of the indebtedness admitted by the garnishee to dissolve the garnishment to the extent of the indebtedness claimed.—Id.

GIFTS.

See Trial, § 252; Trover and Conversion, § 23; Wills, § 194.

I. INTER VIVOS.

§ 4 (Ga.App.) A gift of a chattel, made in contemplation of immediate marriage and ratified after marriage, was founded upon a good consideration, and was binding between the parties.—Hartz v. Hartz, 79 S. E. 230.

The three things essential to consummate a gift of a chattel are: Intention of the donor; acceptance by the donee; and delivery of the chattel, or something which the law will accept in lieu thereof. No writing is necessary.—Id.

§ 48 (Ga.App.) Where, in trover by a wife to recover from her husband a chattel given her by him, he denied making the gift, evidence that at the time of the alleged gift title to a half interest in the chattel was in defendant's brother was admissible to corroborate his testimony that he made no gift, but not to defeat plaintiff's claim if a gift was in fact made.—Hartz v. Hartz, 79 S. E. 230.

GRAND JURY.

See Criminal Law, § 278.

§ 7 (Ga.) Under Acts 1911, p. 81, creating the Dublin judicial circuit and four terms of court for Laurens county, and providing that grand juries shall not be convened except for the spring and fall terms, unless the presiding judge deems it expedient, and under Pen. Code 1910, § 823, which provides for a grand jury at each term, a grand jury was not illegal because the presiding judge at the close of the October term drew the names of grand jurors to serve thereon at the January term.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 34 (Va.) An indictment against accused held not affected by the fact that the commonwealth's attorney, at the request of the grand jury, entered their room to consult with them during their deliberations on other matters in violation of Code 1904, § 3988.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

GUARANTY.

See Constitutional Law, § 303; Principal and Surety.

III. DISCHARGE OF GUARANTOR.

§ 53 (Ga.App.) A material alteration in the original contract, without the knowledge and consent of the guarantor, relieved him from the guaranty.—Little Rock Furniture Co. v. Jones & Co., 79 S. E. 376.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

See Trespass, § 76.

I. GUARDIANSHIP IN GENERAL.

§ 6 (Va.) The relation of master and servant, whereby the master, who did not come into possession of any property of the infant servant or agree to pay him any wages, was to furnish him with food, clothing, and lodging, did not make the master a "guardian de facto or de son tort."—Starke v. Storm's Ex'r, 79 S. E. 1057.

HABEAS CORPUS.

See Divorce, § 289; False Imprisonment, § 7.

II. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

§ 85 (S.C.) It was error to admit as evidence in a habeas corpus proceeding an affidavit of a private individual stating that the Governor of the demanding state had told him that an extradition requisition bearing his official signature and the great seal of the state had not been signed by him.—Ex parte Massee, 79 S. E. 97.

Telegrams in relation to extradition proceedings between the Governors of the two states, indicating withdrawal of the requisition, which were considered on the preliminary hearing in habeas corpus without objection, were properly considered on the final hearing.—Id.

§ 92 (S.C.) Legislation as to extradition being within the power of Congress, its statutes are paramount to state Constitutions and Statutes, and all that a state court can do under habeas corpus proceedings is to determine whether the conditions of the federal Constitution and statutes have been complied with.—Ex parte Massee, 79 S. E. 97.

In habeas corpus the court may determine whether the prisoner is subject to extradition, as whether he is the person charged, whether he is a fugitive from justice, whether he was in the demanding state when the offense was committed, and whether the act charged was a crime there; but it cannot inquire into the motive of the extradition or the merits.—Id.

§ 110 (S.C.) Bail may be granted pending final hearing in habeas corpus; but, where the prisoner is held for extradition, bail should not be allowed, if the federal law has been complied with, though, if not, he may be released absolutely or on bail.—Ex parte Massee, 79 S. E. 97.

That the prisoner held for extradition for a crime was guilty of no moral wrong, the prosecution was a hardship and instituted to collect a debt, and another state had refused extradition, did not show the statutes had not been complied with, and, the extradition papers being regular on their face, the court erred in allowing bail pending hearing in habeas corpus.—Id.

If, pending final hearing in habeas corpus proceedings, the prisoner is released on bail, and he fails to appear, his bail will be forfeited, and the inquiry into the legality of the arrest be deemed abandoned, unless he can give a legal excuse, the acceptance of which is in the discretion of the court.—Id.

§ 113 (Ga.App.) The questions involved on appeal in a habeas corpus proceeding, being moot questions after expiration of the time for which the petitioner was sentenced to serve in the city chain gang, will not be considered.—Johnson v. Harris, 79 S. E. 588.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 1081-1078; Criminal Law, §§ 1163-1174; Trial, § 286.

HEADLIGHTS.

See Railroads, § 362.

HEALTH.

I. BOARDS OF HEALTH AND SANITARY OFFICERS.

§ 16 (N.C.) Under Laws 1911, c. 62, § 15, 21, providing for a system of quarantine, a city held not liable for quarantine expenses unless it had appointed a quarantine officer and adopted a system of quarantine of its own.—Board of Com'rs of Vance County v. Town of Henderson, 79 S. E. 442.

If Revisal 1905, § 4508, imposes a liability for quarantine expenses upon a city which has no quarantine officer, it is incompatible with and repealed by Laws 1911, c. 62, § 21, providing that all expenses of quarantine shall be borne by the town employing a quarantine officer.—Id.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

See Criminal Law, §§ 419, 420; Evidence, §§ 314-324.

HIGHWAYS.

See Bridges; Convicts, § 10; Easements, § 17; Eminent Domain, §§ 79, 80, 101, 203; Evidence, § 441; Municipal Corporations, §§ 225, 544, 655-697, 759-822; Railroads, §§ 94, 95, 301-350; Trial, §§ 252, 253.

III. CONSTRUCTION, IMPROVEMENT, AND REPAIR.

§ 113 (Va.) In an action against a county for the balance of the contract price for constructing a road, a plea of offset, alleging that plaintiff failed to perform its agreement, and that the county was damaged thereby in excess of the amount claimed, is sufficient to entitle the county to recover from the plaintiff.—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

A provision in a contract with a county for road construction that payments should be made on the engineer's estimates does not make such estimates conclusive and prevent inquiry as to whether the work embraced therein was done according to contract, where the contract also provided that no work should be regarded as accepted until final acceptance of the whole work.—Id.

The estimates or other acts of the engineers under a contract with a county for the construction of a road are not binding upon either party, where induced by fraud of the other party or the result of fraud or mistake so great as to amount to fraud on the part of the engineers.—Id.

HOLIDAYS.

See Sunday.

§ 5 (W.Va.) Where notice to take depositions specified that they would be taken on a legal holiday, depositions taken on that day instead of on the next ensuing secular day, which, by Code 1906, c. 15L, the notice is taken to intend, cannot be read on final hearing.—Dixon v. Dixon, 79 S. E. 1016.

HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

See Wills, § 783.

HOMESTEAD.

See Judgment, §§ 503, 506, 720; Usury, § 98.

II. TRANSFER OR INCUMBRANCE.

§ 115 (Ga.) Where a mortgage was given in 1875 on a homestead granted under the Constitution of 1868, and proceedings to foreclose were begun in 1876, and dismissed because the homestead was not subject, a foreclosure proceeding begun in 1910, two years after termination of the homestead right, held not barred by limitations.—Moughon v. Masterson, 79 S. E. 561.

§ 120 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 6584, real estate set apart as a homestead exemption cannot be legally sold, except on order of the superior court.—Brooks v. Tinsley, 79 S. E. 160.

§ 131 (Ga.App.) In an action on a purchase-money note given for a homestead exemption which had been set apart, the defendant, who had no knowledge at the time of the purchase that the property was a homestead, could defend on the ground that the note was without consideration, because the vendors had no right to convey the homestead; and hence it was error to exclude from evidence a certified copy of the homestead exemption.—Brooks v. Tinsley, 79 S. E. 160.

IV. ABANDONMENT, WAIVER, OR FORFEITURE.

§ 169 (N.C.) Const. art. 10, § 8, requiring the consent of the wife to a deed conveying the homestead, applies only when the homestead has been set apart, or there is a judgment lien against the land, and prior to that time the husband may waive his exemption without the consent of the wife.—Simmons v. McCullin, 79 S. E. 625.

§ 172 (N.C.) A judgment defendant who consents that a judgment for a certain amount may be entered in an action against him, and may be satisfied out of the property attached in that action, waives his homestead in the attached property, and cannot thereafter claim an exemption, as he might have done had the judgment been against his consent.—Simmons v. McCullin, 79 S. E. 625.

A debtor can waive his homestead exemption by consenting to the entry of a judgment and its satisfaction out of the homestead, since a judgment entered by consent of the parties is at least as conclusive upon them as one rendered by the court after trial.—Id.

HOMICIDE.

See Assault and Battery, §§ 63, 91, 95; Counties, §§ 132, 139; Criminal Law, §§ 101, 278, 422, 427, 594, 641, 673, 762-764, 778, 779, 823-825, 922, 1169, 1171-1173; Indictment and Information, §§ 63, 84, 110; Witnesses, §§ 128, 274.

II. MURDER.

§ 11 (Ga.) "Legal malice," as related to homicide, is an intent unlawfully to take human life without justification, mitigation, or excuse; and while it must exist at the time of the killing, it need not exist for any length of time before the killing, and is not necessarily ill will or hatred.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 1127.

§ 28 (N.C.) Where the purpose to kill was deliberately and premeditatedly formed when sober, imbibing intoxicants to whatever degree or extent in order to carry out the design will not avail to reduce the murder to the second degree.—State v. Shelton, 79 S. E. 883.

III. MANSLAUGHTER.

§ 68 (Ga.App.) Where a person in violation of Acts 1907, p. 121, Civ. Code, 1910, § 1651, and Pen. Code 1910, § 459, administers morphine to another and causes death, he may be convicted of involuntary manslaughter as defined by Pen. Code 1910, § 67.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter committed by the unlawful administering of a narcotic drug, it was no defense that intent was not to cause death, but to alleviate pain.—Id.

The charge of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 67, can be based on an act malum prohibitum, as well as upon an act malum in se.—Id.

§ 83 (Ga.App.) A defendant may be convicted as principal in the second degree of voluntary manslaughter.—Pope v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

IV. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

§ 89 (Ga.App.) The act of maliciously putting broken glass into food with homicidal intent does not constitute the offense of assault with intent to murder, where the food is not eaten.—Leary v. State, 79 S. E. 584.

§ 100 (Ga.App.) That defendant furnished the room in which the crime was committed, with knowledge that a criminal abortion was to be performed, will not render him guilty as an "accessory before the fact," as defined by Pen. Code 1910, § 45, to an assault with intent to murder, under section 81, making a person guilty of such offense who causes death in an attempted abortion.—Snell v. State, 79 S. E. 71.

V. EXCUSABLE OR JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

§ 105 (Ga.App.) Where a person does not exceed the measure of force necessary in the resistance of an illegal arrest, he is guilty of no offense.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

§ 118 (N.C.) Where an unprovoked assault with intent to kill is made upon a person, he may stand his ground and, if necessary, kill his assailant.—State v. Lucas, 79 S. E. 674.

The rule requiring one to quit the fight before he can maintain self-defense applies only where the person who slays the other provoked the dispute or entered into it unlawfully.—Id.

VI. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

§ 127 (Ga.App.) An indictment for murder need not allege that defendant was of sound mind and discretion.—Brown v. State, 79 S. E. 231.

§ 135 (Ga.App.) An indictment for murder, charging that accused killed deceased by shooting him with a certain pistol and rifle, giving to deceased the mortal wound of which he died, held not demurrable for failure to clearly designate the weapon used or the manner of loading, or that it was aimed at deceased, or that the weapon was one likely to cause death.—Brown v. State, 79 S. E. 231.

§ 138 (Ga.App.) An indictment for voluntary manslaughter through the unlawful administration of morphine need not state the quantity administered.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

§ 142 (Ga.App.) A person indicted as an accessory before the fact to an assault with intent to murder, in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 81, cannot be convicted, upon evidence which shows him to be a principal, either in the first or second degree.—Snell v. State, 79 S. E. 71.

§ 142 (Ga.App.) Under an indictment for murder, charging that accused killed deceased by shooting him with a certain pistol and rifle, the state could prove the killing with either of the weapons alleged.—Brown v. State, 79 S. E. 231.

VII. EVIDENCE.*(A) Presumptions and Burden of Proof.

§ 144 (Ga.) It was not necessary for the state to prove a motive in order to support the presumption of malice, which arises from proof of an unlawful killing.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 150 (N.C.) Defendant claiming that at the time of and immediately before the homicide he had been rendered, by drunkenness, incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, has the burden of proving it, not however beyond a reasonable doubt, but only to the satisfaction of the jury.—State v. Shelton, 79 S. E. 883.

(B) Admissibility in General.

§ 163 (Ga.App.) There being no evidence that prosecutor was attempting to make an assault on accused at the time the latter shot prosecutor, evidence tending to show that prosecutor was a man of violent and turbulent character was properly excluded.—Wimberly v. State, 79 S. E. 767.

§ 167 (Ga.) It was error to admit testimony that a gun owned by a witness was stolen before the homicide, and thereafter found in the possession of another witness, where there was no legal showing that the gun was used by accused, or in any way connected with the crime.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 1127.

§ 174 (Ga.App.) Evidence offered by accused that he made no effort to leave the county or escape after the commission of the homicide was properly excluded.—Dunn v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 178 (N.C.) A charge that it is not allowable when one is charged with crime to show by circumstances or insinuations that some one else killed deceased is proper.—State v. Fogleman, 79 S. E. 879.

(C) Dying Declarations.

§ 207 (Ga.App.) That a dying statement, not reduced to writing, was made by one in articulo mortis previous to a statement which was thereafter reduced to writing, did not render the prior oral statement inadmissible.—Odum v. State, 79 S. E. 868.

§ 215 (Ga.App.) A dying declaration held not inadmissible because declarant said, "I know the man, but I cannot call his name," where other evidence clearly disclosed the identity of the individual referred to.—Odum v. State, 79 S. E. 858.

§ 218 (Ga.App.) Statements by decedent that he could not live and that O. (the accused) had promised to kill him, and if he had known he was going to kill him he would have begged him not to do so, were properly submitted to the jury to determine whether they were dying declarations, under instructions as to what would constitute the same.—Wimbish v. State, 79 S. E. 741.

(E) Weight and Sufficiency.

§ 232 (N.C.) Evidence that defendant armed himself with a dangerous weapon, and that he used abusive language toward deceased prior to the killing, and a statement thereafter that he wished he had shot deceased again, was sufficient to show premeditation and deliberation.—State v. Daniels, 79 S. E. 953.

§ 238 (N.C.) Defendant, claiming that at the time of and immediately before the homicide he had been rendered, by drunkenness, incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, need not prove it beyond a reasonable doubt, but only to the satisfaction of the jury.—State v. Shelton, 79 S. E. 883.

Evidence in a homicide case held insufficient to show that at the time of the killing defendant was so drunk as to render him utterly incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated purpose to kill, but rather to show that he had for months been deliberating and premeditating the murder, and that any drinking by him on the day of the killing was to assist him to execute his purpose.—Id.

VIII. TRIAL.

(B) Questions for Jury.

§ 282 (N.C.) Evidence held to warrant the submission to the jury of the question of defendant's guilt of murder in the first degree.—State v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 419.

(C) Instructions.

§ 289 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for voluntary manslaughter by the unlawful administering of morphine, an instruction that the offense was complete if accused intended to administer the morphine and death resulted was not objectionable for failure to state that to complete the offense death must result directly from the unlawful act.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

§ 295 (Ga.App.) In view of Pen. Code 1910, § 65, it is error to charge that provocation by words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures will in no case free the person killing from the crime of murder, without further charging that words, threats, or menaces may justify a killing if the circumstance be such as reasonably to arouse the fears of a reasonable man that a felony is about to be committed upon him.—Dunn v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 295 (Ga.App.) Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the court instructs relative to the "cooling time," he should state that the cooling time is a question solely for the jury.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

§ 300 (Ga.App.) Under evidence tending to show a mutual intent to fight, it was not error to instruct on the law of justifiable homicide, as contained in Pen. Code 1910, § 70, and on the doctrine of reasonable fear as contained in section 71.—Faison v. State, 79 S. E. 39.

That instructions on Pen. Code 1910, §§ 70, 71, 73, relative to justifiable homicide, and to the requirements that the fear must be reasonable and the danger urgent, follow each other in quick succession, does not necessarily render the charge confusing to the jury.—Id.

§ 300 (N.C.) Error, in an instruction requiring the defendant to prove that he was without fault in entering into the difficulty and also that he withdrew from the fight and retreated as far as he could with safety before he could rely upon self-defense, held not cured by another instruction which referred to the right of self-defense in general terms.—State v. Lucas, 79 S. E. 674.

§ 300 (W.Va.) Where there is appreciable evidence on the subject of self-defense, it is error to refuse instructions properly presenting the law of self-defense.—State v. Edwards, 79 S. E. 1005.

§ 301 (Ga.) Where, in a prosecution of husband and wife for murder, there was no evidence of any assault upon the wife by deceased, or that the husband had killed deceased to prevent such an assault, and the husband denied being present at the killing, an instruction that an attempted assault would have justified the killing by the husband was properly refused.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 309 (Ga.App.) Testimony tending to show a mutual intent to fight authorized an instruction upon voluntary manslaughter.—Faison v. State, 79 S. E. 39.

§ 309 (Ga.App.) Where the theory of voluntary manslaughter is reasonably deducible from the evidence for the accused, it is not error to charge the jury on that subject.—Dunn v. State, 79 S. E. 764.

§ 309 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the state's evidence that accused shot a depot gatekeeper without any present provocation, when considered with defendant's evidence that he was resisting an illegal arrest and evidence of defendant's ejection from the waiting room a few minutes before the shooting, authorized an instruction on voluntary manslaughter.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

§ 310 (Ga.App.) Where there was no evidence of conspiracy between accused and the slayer, and the evidence did not demand a finding that deceased came to his death from a wound inflicted by accused, it was error to refuse to instruct on assault with intent to murder.—Pope v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

IX. NEW TRIAL.

§ 319 (Ga.App.) Alleged newly discovered evidence, both negative and cumulative in character, to show that decedent did not make a dying declaration, where accused admitted that he shot decedent, setting up self-defense, was no ground for new trial, because it is not probable that it would have produced a different result.—Wimbish v. State, 79 S. E. 744.

X. APPEAL AND ERROR.

§ 338 (Ga.) Admission of testimony that a gun was stolen from the witness before the homicide, and found in the possession of another witness after the homicide, held harmless error, where it appeared that, in view of the uncontradicted evidence in the case, the jury could not have been influenced thereby.—Smith v. State, 79 S. E. 1127.

§ 339 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence demanded at least a verdict of guilty of stabbing, which was returned, and a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to kill would have been authorized, errors in rulings as to defendant's statements on the trial were immaterial.—Skinner v. State, 79 S. E. 181.

§ 340 (Ga.App.) Erroneous instructions on the law of murder are harmless, where defendant is convicted of voluntary manslaughter.—Faison v. State, 79 S. E. 39.

§ 340 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, wherein conviction was had for shooting at another, an instruction that evidence of defendant's good character could not of itself produce an acquittal held ground for reversal where there was circumstantial evidence supporting defendant's statement as to justification and the evidence did not demand the conviction.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the refusal of instructions relating to the offense charged was harmless where defendant was convicted only of the lesser offense of shooting at another.—Id.

§ 340 (N.C.) In view of the charge on burden of proof on the state and on reasonable doubt, using the words "beyond a reasonable doubt," instead of "to the satisfaction of the jury," in a charge on the showing of condition of mind from intoxication to reduce the crime to murder in the second degree, held harmless.—State v. Shelton, 79 S. E. 883.

Where there was no sufficient evidence that at the time of the homicide defendant was in such a mental condition, brought about by excessive drinking, as to render him incapable of committing deliberate and premeditated homicide, error in instructing as to the burden on him to show such condition, is harmless.—Id.

§ 340 (S.C.) Where, under the undisputed evidence, a homicide was either in self-defense, or was murder, erroneous charges as to manslaughter were harmless.—State v. Spears, 79 S. E. 315.

I. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

§ 25 (Ga.App.) It is not the duty of a woman's second husband, as the successor of the marital offices of his predecessor, to make a showing for a continuance for his wife in a suit on a note evidencing a debt of her first husband.—Wright v. Bank of Southwestern Georgia, 79 S. E. 184.

V. WIFE'S SEPARATE ESTATE.

(A) What Constitutes.

§ 129 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4419, relative to estoppel from fraudulent acts or silence, where a wife having an equitable title to land to which her husband has the legal title permits him to use same in obtaining credit, she is estopped, after the credit has been extended, from asserting her title as against the lien of a judgment obtained by the creditor, though before judgment her husband had conveyed the land to her.—Ford v. Blackshear Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 576.

§ 133 (Va.) Evidence held to require a finding that real property in controversy was purchased by decedent's widow with funds furnished by herself and her stepson, and that her husband had no interest therein which could be taken by his creditors.—Gent's Ex'r v. Pruner's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1044.

(C) Liabilities and Charges.

§ 154 (Ga.App.) A wife may be held liable on a note executed by her jointly with her husband, where the husband acted as her agent and she received the consideration of the note.—Cook v. Hightower & Co., 79 S. E. 165.

(D) Conveyances and Contracts to Convey.

§ 185 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 3009, providing that no contract of sale by a wife as to her separate property with her husband or trustee shall be valid, unless approved by the superior court, applies to sales by the wife to her husband while they are living in a state of separation.—Echols v. Green, 79 S. E. 557.

Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3009, a sale by a married woman to her husband, without being allowed by the superior court, is not only voidable, but void.—Id.

A deed executed by a wife to her husband in pursuance of a sale of her separate estate, without an order of court, cannot be confirmed by a court of equity, but will be canceled.—Id.

§ 187 (W.Va.) Under Code 1906, c. 68, § 3, a contract by a married woman living with her husband for the sale of her real estate must not only be in writing but must be signed and acknowledged by both of them.—Slaven v. Riley, 79 S. E. 1024.

§ 198 (Va.) In view of the removal of the common-law disabilities of coverture, a married woman, who did not join in the conveyance of property of which she was entitled to a part as tenant in common, is estopped from later setting up the claim, where she stood by for many years and permitted the purchaser to make improvements in good faith.—McCauley v. Grim, 79 S. E. 1041.

§ 201 (Ga.) Where a wife continues in possession of land after making a deed thereof to her husband, in violation of Civ. Code 1910, § 3009, laches will not be imputed to her from her delay for 10 years in suing to cancel the deed.—Echols v. Green, 79 S. E. 557.

A wife is not estopped to deny the validity of a deed executed to her husband with reservation of a life estate to herself, though she received a consideration therefor, and executed the same while she was living separate from her husband; the deed being void under Civ. Code 1910, § 3009, prohibiting conveyances between husband and wife without order of court.—Id.

In a suit by a wife to cancel a deed executed by her to her husband without approval of the superior court, as required by Civ. Code 1910, § 3009, the wife is required to offer to return the consideration received by her.—Id.

VI. ACTIONS.

§ 209 (Ga.App.) In an action by a wife for personal injuries, an instruction as to the amount of damages recoverable by plaintiff for her diminished capacity to discharge her ordinary daily duties was erroneous, since plaintiff's husband was entitled to her services.—Berrien County v. Allen, 79 S. E. 1129.

IX. ABANDONMENT.

§ 302 (N.C.) In order to constitute wife abandonment, a husband's desertion must be willful, without the wife's consent, and it must also appear that he has failed to provide adequate support for her.—State v. Smith, 79 S. E. 979.

§ 305 (N.C.) Husband's offer to provide his wife a home in another city, not made in good faith, is no defense to a prosecution for abandonment.—State v. Smith, 79 S. E. 979.

§ 306 (Va.) That a wife, after separation because of her husband's fault, took service and supported herself was no defense to a prosecution for nonsupport.—Draper v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 322.

In a prosecution of a husband by the commonwealth for nonsupport of his wife, her motive in testifying against him is immaterial.—Id.

§ 313 (N.C.) Evidence held to sustain conviction of a husband for willful abandonment of his wife without providing adequate support for her and her child.—State v. Smith, 79 S. E. 979.

§ 313 (Va.) In a prosecution for total nonsupport of accused's wife, evidence that he had two small children by a former marriage dependent on him held inadmissible.—Draper v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 322.

X. ENTICING AND ALIENATING.

§ 326 (N.C.) In an action by a husband for alienation of affections alleging adultery, consent of the wife is no defense.—Powell v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 872.

§ 333 (N.C.) Adultery need not be shown by direct proof, in an action for alienation of affections, but may be shown by circumstances from which a jury may reasonably infer it.—Powell v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 872.

Evidence, in an action for alienation of affections of plaintiff's wife, held to sustain a finding of adultery committed by defendant and plaintiff's wife.—Id.

§ 334 (N.C.) The jury should consider in awarding compensatory damages plaintiff's dishonor, the alienation of his wife's affections, and destruction of his domestic comfort, the suspicion cast on the offspring, humiliation, loss of consortium, etc.—Powell v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 872.

The jury in their sound discretion may award punitive damages, in an action for alienation of affections, if defendant's conduct be wilful and wanton.—Id.

Facts, in an action for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's wife, held to sustain an award of punitive damages.—Id.

I. NECESSITY OF INDICTMENT OR PRESENTMENT.

§ 3 (N.C.) Under Const. art. 1, §§ 12, 13, perjury being punishable by imprisonment in the state's prison as provided by Revisal 1905, § 3615, it is a felony as defined by section 3291, triable only on indictment, and not a misdemeanor.—State v. Hyman, 79 S. E. 284.

II. FINDING AND FILING OF INDICTMENT OR PRESENTMENT.

§ 15 (Ga.App.) That another indictment is pending against defendant, charging him with the same offense, is not ground for a plea in abatement.—Brown v. State, 79 S. E. 231.

V. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF ACCUSATION.

§ 63 (Ga.App.) An indictment charging voluntary manslaughter by the administering of morphine, held not objectionable as stating a conclusion instead of a fact.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

§ 71 (Ga.App.) An indictment charging that accused, being cashier of a railway company, embezzled money in his possession as cashier, of a specified amount, held not demurrable on the ground that it was too indefinite, and failed to allege the funds embezzled, or from whom or on what account obtained, or how the money came into his possession.—Trueheart v. State, 79 S. E. 755.

§ 75 (Ga.App.) An indictment charging defendant with entering a dwelling house and stealing therefrom valuable goods is a good indictment under Pen. Code 1910, § 175, though the word "privately" is omitted.—Jenkins v. State, 79 S. E. 861.

§ 84 (Ga.App.) An indictment as an accessory before the fact need not state the manner of committing the offense, but may charge generally that defendant feloniously, willfully, and unlawfully did procure, counsel, and command the principal to commit it.—Snell v. State, 79 S. E. 71.

An indictment stating that accused "did then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and willfully procure, counsel, and command" the principal to commit an assault with intent to murder, in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 81, held sufficient to charge defendant as an accessory before the fact.—Id.

§ 87 (Va.) An indictment charging that accused, on — day of —, in the year 19—, and within the last two years, did unlawfully sell whisky without a license, etc., sufficiently charged that the sale was within the statutory period of limitations.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

§ 109 (Ga.App.) An accusation charging in one count the sale of liquor generally, and in a second count the furnishing of liquor to a minor without first securing the written authority of the "parent and guardian," is not subject to special demurrer as to the second count, in that the conjunctive instead of the disjunctive is used between the words "parent" and "guardian."—Ross v. State, 79 S. E. 746.

§ 110 (Ga.App.) Under Pen. Code 1910, § 954, an indictment charging an assault with intent to murder, under section 81, making it such offense to cause death by an attempted abortion, is sufficient as against a general demurrer when the allegations are clear and in the language of the statute, though it does not allege the character of the instruments, how and upon what part of the person they were used.—Snell v. State, 79 S. E. 71.

I. JOINDER OF PARTIES, OFFENSES, AND COUNTS, DUPLICITY, AND ELECTION.

§ 124 (S.C.) An indictment against two persons joint in form is in legal effect joint and several, and hence one of the defendants may be convicted and the other acquitted.—State v. Wade, 79 S. E. 106.

§ 125 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for perjury, it is permissible to join in a single count a number of distinct material statements alleged to have been falsely sworn to by defendant in the same investigation.—Black v. State, 79 S. E. 173.

II. PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCES.

§ 31 (Va.) Where the remaindermen conveyed land which was subject to a life estate, 15 years' adverse possession barred the life tenant's rights and the two estates in the grantees merged. Hence one of the remaindermen, who claimed he was an infant at the time of his conveyance, must disaffirm within 15 years after he life tenant's rights were barred.—McCauley v. Grim, 79 S. E. 1041.

IV. CONTRACTS.

§ 50 (Va.) Contracts by an infant servant to perform personal services in return for food, clothing, and lodging, without any express agreement or other compensation, held a contract or necessities which the infant servant had the right to make.—Starke v. Storm's Ex'r, 79 S. E. 1057.

VII. ACTIONS.

§ 99 (Va.) Where a party many years after a conveyance of land sought to set aside his contract on the ground of infancy, proof of infancy must be clear and conclusive, and the party's testimony, supplemented by an unsworn statement upon which he procured a marriage license, is not sufficient.—McCauley v. Grim, 79 S. E. 1041.

§ 112 (N.C.) That parties to a suit in which consent decree was entered were infants only renders the decree voidable and not void and hence cannot be attacked collaterally.—Rawls v. Mayo, 79 S. E. 298.

II. SUBJECTS OF PROTECTION AND RELIEF.

(A) Actions and Other Legal Proceedings.

§ 26 (Ga.) The prosecution of an action at law will not be enjoined because of certain matters which are available as a defense in the action at law.—Reynolds Banking Co. v. Southern Pacific Guano Co., 79 S. E. 132.

§ 27 (Ga.) The invalidity of a void judgment could be set up as a defense in a scire facias proceeding to revive the judgment; and hence an injunction sought against the scire facias proceeding was properly denied.—Bell v. Verdel, 79 S. E. 849.

§ 32 (Ga.) An injunction to stay proceedings in courts of law is not directed against the court itself, but against the parties to the proceeding.—Stone v. King-Hodgson Co., 79 S. E. 122.

(B) Property, Conveyances, and Incumbrances.

§ 36 (S.C.) Where it was a question of fact whether defendant had begun to remove timber within a reasonable time, plaintiff claiming to own the timber by reason of defendant's failure, injunction should issue to preserve the property in statu quo, pending determination of the issue of title.—Gresham v. Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, 79 S. E. 799.

(E) Public Officers and Boards and Municipalities.

§ 77 (W.Va.) Equity will restrain a municipal corporation from abating a nuisance, where private rights are unlawfully encroached upon and irreparable injury will ensue.—Parker v. City of Fairmont, 79 S. E. 660.

§ 85 (W.Va.) Equity has jurisdiction to restrain a municipal corporation from proceeding under an illegal resolution to remove a fence as an alleged nuisance, where private rights are encroached upon and substantial injury would result.—Donohoe v. Fredlock, 79 S. E. 736.

III. ACTIONS FOR INJUNCTIONS.

§ 107 (Ga.) An action at law will not ordinarily be enjoined at the instance of one not a party thereto.—Stone v. King-Hodgson Co., 79 S. E. 122.

§ 111 (Ga.) Civ. Code, 1910, § 5527, providing that an injunction to restrain pending proceedings may be filed where the proceedings are pending, provided no relief is prayed as to matters not included in such proceedings, escapes violating the provision of the Constitution incorporated in Civ. Code 1910, § 6540, that "equity cases shall be tried in the county where a defendant resides, against whom substantial relief is prayed," only on the theory of waiver; and injunction will not lie under the former section at the instance of a third person to restrain the prosecution of a suit, where the petition in injunction prays relief beyond that sought in such suit.—Stone v. King-Hodgson Co., 79 S. E. 122.

IV. PRELIMINARY AND INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTIONS.

(A) Grounds and Proceedings to Procure.

§ 132 (S.C.) Injunction restraining grantee of timber excepting such as might be necessary for plantation use from further cutting pending a suit held to have improperly restrained the removal of timber already cut.—Marion County Lumber Co. v. Hodges, 79 S. E. 1096.

§ 147 (Ga.) At the hearing of an application for an interlocutory injunction, the presiding judge may, in his discretion, allow witnesses to be examined orally, though the evidence ordinarily consists only of affidavits.—Chattanooga & C. I. Ry. Co. v. Morrison, 79 S. E. 903.

§ 148 (S.C.) A bond is required, under the statute, of relators to whom a temporary injunction is granted by a judge of the Supreme Court.—State v. Pattersen, 79 S. E. 522.

§ 148 (S.C.) Granting of temporary injunction without requiring bond as required by statute held erroneous.—Marion County Lumber Co. v. Hodges, 79 S. E. 1096.

§ 157 (S.C.) A judge, after making an order for temporary injunction, may on motion amend it to require relators to give a bond.—State v. Pattersen, 79 S. E. 522.

VIII. LIABILITIES ON BONDS OR UNDERTAKINGS.

§ 239 (W.Va.) Counsel fees paid for services connected with the awarding of a temporary injunction as ancillary to the main relief sought, and other expenses not incurred on account of the injunction, are not recoverable in an action on the injunction bond.—State v. Nash, 79 S. E. 829.

A temporary injunction in a suit to remove a cloud, and to enjoin defendant from trespassing, and taking steps to redeem his title from forfeiture to the state, held ancillary to the main purpose of the suit, and hence expenses incurred therein could not be recovered in an action on the injunction bond.—Id.

IN PAIS.

See Estoppel, §§ 54-93.

INSANE PERSONS.

See Evidence, § 63; Insurance, §§ 293, 665; States, § 191.

IX. ACTIONS.

§ 92 (Va.) In an action by the committee of an insane person confined in a state hospital to protect his beneficial interest in a trust fund held by the hospital for a certain purpose and to prevent a misappropriation thereof, brought after the will was probated and not involving its validity, held, that the testator's heirs at law were not necessary parties.—General Board of State Hospitals for the Insane v. Robertson, 79 S. E. 1064.

§ 93 (Va.) Under Code 1804, §§ 1697, 1702, held, that the committee of an insane person committed to a hospital, the lunatic being a beneficiary of a trust fund held by the hospital, might maintain an action to prevent misappropriation under acts of the General Assembly by the general board of state hospitals for the insane.—General Board of State Hospitals for the Insane v. Robertson, 79 S. E. 1064.

See Constitutional Law, § 206; Evidence, §§ 122, 271, 405, 413, 441, 450; New Trial, § 70; Warehousemen, § 34.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION IN GENERAL.

§ 20 (S.C.) Under Civ. Code 1912, §§ 2669, 2670, 2671, 2700, where relator sued a foreign insurance company, which removed the cause to the federal court, and on return of an order to show cause why its license should not be revoked it showed that such removal was a mistake and offered to have the cause remanded, the commissioner had discretion to refuse to revoke the license.—State v. McMaster, 79 S. E. 405.

V. THE CONTRACT IN GENERAL.

(A) Nature, Requisites, and Validity.

§ 132 (N.C.) A binding slip issued on an application for insurance is a mere written memorandum of the most important terms of a preliminary contract of insurance, intended to give temporary protection pending investigation of the risk, and subject to all the conditions of the contemplated policy, even though it may never issue.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

A binding slip protects the applicant for insurance against sickness between its date and the delivery of the policy only in case the application is accepted and the policy delivered.—Id.

§ 137 (N.C.) Where insured received the policy as an ordinary applicant having no confidential relation with the company, and not as its agent, as claimed, and the company trusted him to pay the premium, the policy was then delivered and in force.—Pender v. North State Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 293.

§ 138 (N.C.) Revisal 1908, § 4773a, providing that no insurance company shall sell any policy granting insurance in an amount less than $500 until the forms have been approved by the insurance commissioner, held a restriction on the insurance company and not on the contract, and does not invalidate a policy for less than that amount.—Blount v. Royal Fraternal Ass'n, 79 S. E. 299.

§ 138 (N.C.) Where plaintiff contracted to take out a life policy for a quarterly premium of $38.53, which was less than the regular premium, he could refuse to make a new contract to pay the increased rate, whether the contract as originally made was legal or illegal.—Robinson v. Security Life & Annuity Co., 79 S. E. 681.

Revisal 1905, § 4775, prohibiting discrimination in favor of individual insureds of the same class, held to operate on insurance companies alone, and not to invalidate a policy issued for less than the regular premium.—Id.

(B) Construction and Operation.

§ 146 (S.C.) Where there is an ambiguity in a contract of insurance, it should be construed against the insurer.—Bennettsville & C. R. Co. v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 717.

§ 165 (S.C.) Where a fire policy was issued to indemnify a railroad company on all liability as a common carrier of cotton in bales in transit in cars, or in or on depots, or platforms, on line of assured's road, the policy covered cotton which was placed on the ground, but was intended to be immediately shipped.—Bennettsville & C. R. Co. v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 717.

§ 175 (S.C.) A fire policy, issued to indemnify a railroad company for its liability as a common carrier of cotton, held to cover a loss of cotton for which no bill of lading was issued until it was actually burning, though the policy provided that the liability should begin at the time the bill of lading was issued and when delivered.—Bennettsville & C. R. Co. v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 717.

§ 179½ (Ga.App.) The provisions of a life insurance policy relating to loans, when construed in connection with an "automatically nonforfeitable" clause, held to give the policy no loan value which could be automatically applied to the payment of insured's second quarterly premium for the second year, and to render no amount available to insured as a loan until the end of the second year and the payment by him of the full annual premium for the third policy year.—Blalock v. Empire Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 374.

VI. PREMIUMS, DUES, AND ASSESSMENTS.

§ 184 (Ga.App.) An agreement with an agent of the insurer that, if the insured will take the local agency of the company, the agent will write other insurance locally without the aid of insured and divide his commissions on same with insured, so as to provide for the payment of his premium notes, is a mere subterfuge, amounting to an illegal rebate.—Thomson v. McLaughlin, 79 S. E. 182.

§ 195 (Va.) Where the charter of a mutual assessment fire company which required yearly assessments, provided that notice by mail of the new assessment should be sufficient, and required the insured in case of a change of address to notify the secretary, which she did not do, the giving of notice in an unsealed letter which could not be forwarded is sufficient to charge the insured with notice, though she did not receive it for that reason.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Turner, 79 S. E. 1067.

That for the past two years the company had given notice by post card is not a waiver of its right to give notice by second-class mail which cannot be forwarded as a postal.—Id.

§ 198 (N.C.) Where an insurance company issued a policy for less than the regular premium to plaintiff, who paid the specified premiums for a number of years, when the insurance company canceled the policy as violative of Revisal 1905, § 4775, the parties were not in pari delicto, and plaintiff was entitled to recover premiums paid as money received to his use.—Robinson v. Security Life & Annuity Co., 79 S. E. 681.

IX. AVOIDANCE OF POLICY FOR MISREPRESENTATION, FRAUD, OR BREACH OF WARRANTY OR CONDITION.

(A) Grounds in General.

§ 253 (N.C.) Where a fact is specifically inquired about in an application for insurance, the applicant is required to make a substantial disclosure thereof.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

§ 255 (N.C.) Every fact which is untruly stated or wrongfully suppressed in an application for insurance must be regarded as material, if knowledge or ignorance thereof would reasonably influence the underwriter in estimating the character of the risk, or in fixing the premium.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

§ 256 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 4808, a materially false statement in an application for insurance will avoid the policy, if it is calculated to influence the insurer, where the latter had no knowledge of the falsity either in making the contract, in estimating the risk, or in fixing the premium.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

(C) Matters Relating to Person Insured.

§ 293 (Va.) Fraud in obtaining life insurance was not established by untrue answers in the application failing to disclose that insured's uncle was afflicted with hereditary insanity, where the proof failed to show that insured knew that the insanity was hereditary and that the answers were willfully false.—South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt's Adm'x, 79 S. E. 401.

A question in an application for life insurance as to whether any of the applicant's uncles or aunts had consumption or any hereditary disease held to relate to physical condition and not to include hereditary insanity.—Id.

§ 299 (N.C.) Where an applicant for insurance falsely represented that within a year he had not been intimately associated with any one suffering from a transmissible disease, such misrepresentation avoided the policy, unless the insurer waived the same with full knowledge of the facts.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

X. FORFEITURE OF POLICY FOR BREACH OF PROMISSORY WARRANTY, COVENANT, OR CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

(E) Nonpayment of Premiums or Assessments.

§ 349 (Ga.App.) Mere failure to pay a note given for an insurance premium will not forfeit the policy, where it does not provide for such forfeiture, though the note stipulates that nonpayment at maturity will avoid the policy.—Columbian Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Mulkey, 79 S. E. 482.

XI. ESTOPPEL, WAIVER, OR AGREEMENTS AFFECTING RIGHT TO AVOID OR FORFEIT POLICY.

§ 377 (N.C.) Where insured falsely represented that he had not been intimately associated with any one suffering from a transmissible disease within the past year, insurer could not be held to have waived such misrepresentation in the absence of proof or knowledge that the representation was false.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

§ 378 (N.C.) Where an insurance agent delivers a policy with knowledge of a materially false representation on the part of the applicant, he acts for himself and not for the company, and participates in a fraud which avoids the policy.—Gardner v. North State Mut. Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 806.

Where an insurance agent wrongfully delivers a policy with knowledge that insured is then suffering from his last illness, such knowledge will not be imputed to insurer.—Id.

§ 378 (Va.) Where insurer's medical examiner had full knowledge concerning the mental condition of insured's family, his uncles and aunts, the insurer was bound by the physician's knowledge, though the contract provided that he should be the agent of the insured.—South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt's Adm'x, 79 S. E. 401.

§ 392 (N.C.) Where a company wrote agents calling for payment of premiums on policies or the return of policies without insisting on new physical examination, and received applicant's note for premium, and retained it, held, that it waived the requirement for a new physical examination where policies were not delivered within 60 days of their issuance.—Pender v. North State Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 293.

§ 392 (Va.) Where a mutual assessment fire company reinstated insured's policy after default in payment of assessments, the reinstatement which came after the insured had discharged a lien on the premises is the waiver of the original ground of forfeiture on account of the lien.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Turner, 79 S. E. 1067.

XVIII. ACTIONS ON POLICIES.

§ 618 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 2563, providing that a suit against an insurance company may be brought in a county where an agent was located at the time of the issuance of the policy, though there was none in that county when the suit was filed, does not violate the provision of the Constitution that all, except certain specified civil cases, shall be tried in the county where the defendant resides.—Jefferson Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brackin, 79 S. E. 467.

Civ. Code 1910, § 2563, allowing suits against an insurance company to be brought in the county where the company had an office at the time the policy was issued, applies to both foreign and domestic companies doing business within the state.—Id.

§ 622 (Ga.) Where a policy provides that no suit shall be brought thereon after 12 months from the fire, an action after that time is barred, though purporting to be a renewal of a prior action in another court, which was dismissed and renewed after payment of all costs within 6 months from the dismissal.—Gross v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 138.

§ 626 (Ga.) Service of process in an action against an insurance company, which has ceased to do business in the county where the policy was written, may be obtained by serving a second original process upon the company at its office in another county, where it had an agent to receive service of process.—Jefferson Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brackin, 79 S. E. 467.

§ 646 (Va.) In an action on a life policy, the burden is on the defendant to prove a defense of suicide by clear and satisfactory evidence.—South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt's Adm'x, 79 S. E. 401.

Where the evidence in an action on a life policy as to whether insured's death was accidental or suicidal leaves the question in doubt, it will be presumed that it was accidental.—Id.

§ 665 (N.C.) In an action on an insurance policy where there has been an actual delivery and nothing else appears, the production of the policy by the beneficiary makes a prima facie case.—Pender v. North State Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 293.

§ 665 (Va.) Where, in an action on a life policy, the evidence that insured committed suicide is circumstantial, the defense of suicide will fail unless the circumstances exclude with reasonable certainty any hypothesis of death by accident.—South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt's Adm'x, 79 S. E. 401.

In the absence of evidence of any demeanor, act, or word on the part of insured indicating insanity, the fact that he had insane relatives was insufficient to show that he was insane at the time of his death.—Id.

§ 668 (Va.) In an action on a life policy, evidence held to require submission to the jury of the question whether insured died as a result of accident or committed suicide.—South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt's Adm'x, 79 S. E. 401.

§ 669 (Va.) In an action against a mutual assessment fire company, where it was contended that the method of giving notice of assessment to the insured was not proper, the instructions should submit the issue in that form and not whether the notice should have been given in the manner previously followed.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Turner, 79 S. E. 1067.

In an action against a mutual assessment fire company, instructions on the necessity for the insurer to give notice of assessments requested by defendant held correct and improperly refused.—Id.

§ 670 (N.C.) Findings that a life insurance policy was delivered and took effect on December 6, 1906, and that it was delivered and took effect on May 10, 1907, held not inconsistent.—Pender v. North State Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 293.

XX. MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE.

(B) The Contract in General.

§ 718 (Ga.App.) A fraternal benefit association is exempt from the rule prescribed in Civ. Code 1910, § 2471, that the constitution or by-laws of insurance companies doing business in the state shall not be received in evidence as part of the policy unless embodied in or attached thereto.—Supreme Ruling of Fraternal Mystic Circle v. Blackshear, 79 S. E. 210.

(F) Actions for Benefits.

§ 815 (N.C.) Where a benefit certificate for $500 contained a provision that in case of death not more than one-fifth of the amount otherwise due should be payable for each full year of membership, plaintiff, seeking to be relieved from such provision on the ground that the policy had not been approved by the insurance commissioner as required by Revisal 1908, § 4773a, was bound to allege and prove such fact.—Blount v. Royal Fraternal Ass'n, 79 S. E. 299.

I. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES IN GENERAL.

§ 18 (N.C.) Where a grocery account was presented to the debtor, who promised to pay it, the creditor was entitled to interest thereon.—Scott v. Reynolds, 79 S. E. 960.

III. TIME AND COMPUTATION.

§ 50 (N.C.) A plea of tender was insufficient to stop interest where the tender was not kept good and defendant did not produce the money and pay it into court.—Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Davenport, 79 S. E. 602.

INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTION.

See Injunction, §§ 182-157.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Carriers, §§ 32, 36; Commerce.

INTERVENTION.

See Parties.

INTER VIVOS.

VI. OFFENSES.

§ 132 (N.C.) Laws 1913, c. 44, created two new offenses with regard to intoxicating liquors and did not go into effect until April 1, 1913; consequently a conviction in February, 1913, cannot be supported thereby.—State v. Watkins, 79 S. E. 619.

§ 132 (S.C.) In determining the public policy of a state with reference to guilt in questions of the sale and purchase of intoxicating liquor, the court must accept the statutes as fixing the public policy.—City of Anderson v. Fant, 79 S. E. 641.

In determining the public policy of the state with reference to the sale and purchase of intoxicating liquor, the courts have no concern with the reasons of the lawmakers in failing to condemn the buyer.—Id.

§ 132 (Va.) Act March 25, 1902 (Acts 1901-02, c. 307), prohibiting the sale of liquors in certain counties, did not render the general revenue law and the Bryd Law, prohibiting sales without a license, inapplicable to such counties so as to preclude a prosecution for a violation thereof in the circuit court.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

§ 134 (Va.) The term "liquor" in its limited sense and in its more common application implies spirituous fluids, whether fermented or distilled such as brandy, whisky, gin, beer, and wine.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

§ 138 (S.C.) In view of the public policy of the state as illustrated by Cr. Code 1912, §§ 794, 825, one who purchased, as an agent for others, intoxicants from one not authorized to sell and transported it to them is not guilty of a violation of the municipal ordinance making the transporting of contraband liquors a misdemeanor.—City of Anderson v. Fant, 79 S. E. 641.

§ 139 (Ga.App.) Where accused received a package of whisky by express and delivered it to a hackman, with directions to take it to accused's residence and deliver it to his wife, and the hackman, finding no one at the residence, took the package to accused's restaurant, during accused's absence and without his knowledge, a conviction of accused for keeping of intoxicating liquors in his place of business was not justified.—Johnson v. State, 79 S. E. 758.

§ 140 (N.C.) Person who in good faith purchased liquor in another state as agent for other parties and brought it within the state held not to have possession for the purpose of sale within Pub. Laws 1913, c. 44.—State v. Wilkerson, 79 S. E. 888.

§ 146 (Ga.App.) Civ. Code 1910, § 933, permits a social club to keep on hand intoxicating liquors for its members upon payment of the required license tax, providing the liquor belongs to such club, but it does not authorize it or any individual member to sell the same.—Cronin v. State, 79 S. E. 747.

§ 169 (N.C.) Person purchasing liquor where it was lawful to sell it as agent of other persons and bringing it within the state for distribution to such persons held not to have violated Rev. 1905, § 3534, relative to unlawfully procuring and delivering intoxicating liquors.—State v. Wilkerson, 79 S. E. 888.

§ 169 (S.C.) One who acts in good faith solely as the agent or messenger of a purchaser of intoxicating liquors is not himself guilty of violating the law against the illegal sale of intoxicants.—City of Anderson v. Fant, 79 S. E. 641.

§ 176 (Ga.App.) Where accused sold substitutes for intoxicants without obtaining a license, in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 448, it was no defense that he obtained a license some months after he began to do business.—Quinlan v. State, 79 S. E. 768.

VIII. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

§ 196 (N.C.) Laws 1913, c. 44, which by section 5 changed rules of evidence, did not go into effect until April 1, 1913; consequently a conviction in February, 1913, cannot be supported thereby.—State v. Watkins, 79 S. E. 619.

§ 216 (Va.) "Whisky" is a spirit distilled from grain, barley, maize, wheat, rye, etc., and the use of the term whisky in an indictment charging the defendant with selling intoxicating liquor, to wit, one quart of whisky, is sufficient to allege a sale of fermented or distilled liquor, within the statute prohibiting the sale thereof.—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

§ 223 (N.C.) Under an indictment for selling intoxicating liquors to persons to the grand jurors unknown, the state to convict must offer evidence tending to prove an actual sale to the unknown persons.—State v. Watkins, 79 S. E. 619.

§ 223 (N.C.) Where a person was indicted and tried for having unlawful possession of liquor for purpose of sale under Pub. Laws 1913, c. 44, he could not be convicted of violating Pub. Laws 1911, c. 133, relative to the maintenance of a place where liquors are received for sale, distribution, etc.—State v. Wilkerson, 79 S. E. 888.

§ 223 (Va.) Evidence that prosecuting witness purchased "corn liquor" from accused was sufficient to sustain a conviction under an indictment charging the unlawful sale of "whisky, brandy, gin, beer, malt liquors, and mixtures thereof."—Mullins v. Commonwealth, 79 S. E. 324.

§ 224 (Ga.App.) Where, in a prosecution for illegal sale of liquors, the defendant claims he was acting as agent for the purchaser, the burden of proof is on him to show that he received no benefit from the sale.—Johnson v. State, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 236 (Ga.App.) Proof of delivery of whisky by accused, and payment of money to him by the purchaser, makes out a prima facie case of selling intoxicating liquors.—Johnson v. State, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 236 (Ga.App.) A witness' testimony that he went to the home of accused and got a pint of whisky "from him and his wife," and laid 75 cents on the table, held to sustain a conviction of violating the prohibition law.—Greer v. State, 79 S. E. 746.

§ 236 (Ga.App.) Evidence that accused handed another person a bottle containing whisky and received something in return, which he placed in his pocket, held to sustain a conviction of violating the general prohibition law.—Spicer v. State, 79 S. E. 747.

§ 236 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors, evidence held insufficient to support a conviction.—Williams v. State, 79 S. E. 763.

§ 236 (N.C.) In a prosecution for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, evidence held insufficient to support a conviction.—State v. Watkins, 79 S. E. 619.

Where a local law, making the possession of more than one quart of whisky prima facie evidence that the possessor had it for the purpose of sale, did not apply to the county in which accused was charged with the crime, the mere fact that a barrel of whisky was consigned to accused will not support a conviction for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors.—Id.

§ 238 (N.C.) On trial for having possession of intoxicating liquor for the purpose of sale, evidence that accused purchased it in another state as agent for other persons held to make questions for the jury as to his intent and as to whether the transaction was a sale.—State v. Wilkerson, 79 S. E. 888.

§ 242 (Ga.App.) That accused, several months after he began to sell substitutes for intoxicants without obtaining a license, in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 448, obtained a license and paid the tax might be considered in mitigation of punishment.—Quinlan v. State, 79 S. E. 768.

XI. CIVIL DAMAGE LAWS.

§ 309 (W.Va.) In a suit under the civil damage act, evidence tending to show that defendant was chargeable with knowledge that plain-tiff's husband was in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess held properly admitted.—Greer v. Arrington, 79 S. E. 720.

JUDGMENT.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 69, 70, 267, 930, 1009, 1073, 1138-1195; Attachment, § 339; Bankruptcy, §§ 421, 426; Bills and Notes, § 534; Cancellation of Instruments, § 59; Carriers, § 184; Certiorari, § 70; Chattel Mortgages, § 138; Contempt, §§ 63, 66; Corporations, § 479; Courts, §§ 89-107; Criminal Law, §§ 982, 1058; Divorce, § 289; Equity, § 427; Execution; Garnishment, § 191; Infants, § 112; Justices of the Peace, §§ 125, 127, 128; Partnership, § 344; Pleading, § 343; Usury, § 98; Vendor and Purchaser, § 208; Wills, § 355.

I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

§ 1 (N.C.) In its ordinary acceptance, a judgment is the conclusion of the law on facts admitted or in some way established.—Sedbury v. Southern Express Co., 79 S. E. 286.

§ 17 (Ga.) A judgment rendered at the ensuing September term, after an acknowledgment of service after the adjournment of the March term, which was insufficient as an acknowledgment that the petition and process had been served on defendant in time, held void.—Bell v. Verdel, 79 S. E. 849.

IV. BY DEFAULT.

(A) Requisites and Validity.

§ 106 (N.C.) A default judgment may be rendered, although the cause is not on the trial or motion docket.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 128 (W.Va.) An office judgment, in an action in which a writ of inquiry is necessary, does not become final on the last day of the next succeeding term of court, and the defendant may plead to the declaration at any time before execution of the writ of inquiry.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1083.

(B) Opening or Setting Aside Default.

§ 138 (N.C.) A defendant seeking to set aside a default must show that he used care in protecting his rights; the standard of care required being that which an ordinarily prudent man bestows upon his important business.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 143 (N.C.) Defendant held not entitled to have his default judgment vacated, being guilty of inexcusable neglect because failing to request an extension of time to answer, even when he knew that he was in default.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

To warrant a vacation of a default judgment, it must appear that the defendant's neglect was excusable.—Id.

§ 145 (N.C.) To warrant a vacation of a default judgment, it must appear that the defendant had a meritorious defense.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 150 (W.Va.) Where defendant, in an action in which the office judgment has become final but is not entered, demurs to the declaration, and the demurrer is sustained, formal judgment on the office judgment cannot be entered; but the office judgment becomes a nullity, if the declaration be not curable and amended.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1083.

§ 162 (N.C.) The burden of establishing a meritorious defense necessary to procure the setting aside of a default judgment rests upon the defendant.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 167 (N.C.) Under the direct provisions of Revisal, § 453, a defendant, in an action for the recovery of land, is required to file a cost bond before he may answer, plead, or demur; consequently the filing of such cost bond is a condition precedent to the setting aside of a default judgment.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

VI. ON TRIAL OF ISSUES.

(A) Rendition, Form, and Requisites in General.

§ 199 (W.Va.) Where plaintiff claims more than defendant admits owing, and secures a verdict for the amount admitted, and the pleadings put in issue his right to have more than such amount, he is not entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto for a sum larger than the verdict.—Indiana & Ohio Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Bowman, 79 S. E. 651.

(C) Conformity to Process, Pleadings, Proofs, and Verdict or Findings.

§ 252 (N.C.) Where corporation repudiated agreement to build railroad in consideration of reduced price for standing timber, the difference between contract price and actual value of timber held recoverable, in an action in which the prayer for relief was for judgment for the stipulated penalty for failure to build the railroad.—Herring v. Wallace Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 876.

IX. OPENING OR VACATING.

§ 358 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action on a note conditioned for the payment of attorney's fees if it be collected through an attorney, defendant's unsworn answer was erroneously stricken, it was error to overrule a motion, made during the term, to vacate a judgment for plaintiff which included attorney's fees.—Walker v. Wood, 79 S. E. 905.

§ 364 (N.C.) In suit for partition of tract constituting five-sixteenths of larger tract, belief of plaintiffs' counsel that description furnished him by a third person was of the larger tract and that his clients owned five-sixteenths undivided interest therein, when in fact it was of the smaller tract, the whole of which his clients owned, held such a mistake of fact as justified the setting aside of a verdict and judgment awarding plaintiffs five-sixteenths of the tract described, under Revisal 1905, § 513.—Mann v. Hall, 79 S. E. 437.

§ 365 (Ga.App.) A judgment should be set aside, where a party who has filed a meritorious defense was kept away from court under such circumstances that the court should have continued the case if aware of the facts.—Wright v. Bank of Southwestern Georgia, 79 S. E. 184.

§ 382 (N.C.) Where plaintiffs in partition by mistake claimed five-sixteenths of tract, all of which they owned, held, that verdict and judgment awarding them five-sixteenths and defendants eleven-sixteenths were against them within Revisal 1905, § 513, authorizing the setting aside of judgments and verdicts for mistake, etc.—Mann v. Hall, 79 S. E. 437.

§ 384 (Ga.App.) Where defendant moved during the term that the judgment be set aside upon the showing made for a continuance, and showed that she was providentially prevented from attending court by illness and that she had filed a meritorious defense, denial of the motion was error, though it was denominated a motion for new trial.—Wright v. Bank of Southwestern Georgia, 79 S. E. 184.

§ 386 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 2494, the clerk of the superior court was authorized, 17 months after the rendition of a judgment in a partition suit, to set aside the judgment on motion of defendant, where defendant was prevented by fraud of plaintiff from defending.—Turner v. Davis, 79 S. E. 257.

XI. COLLATERAL ATTACK.

(A) Judgments Impeachable Collaterally.

§ 478 (N.C.) A judgment in which the proceeds of land were adjudicated to be real estate assets is binding upon all the parties thereto unless reversed by appeal.—Rawls v. Mayo, 79 S. E. 298.

(B) Grounds.

§ 503 (Ga.App.) A judgment of the ordinary setting aside a homestead exemption allowed under the Constitution of 1877 cannot be collaterally attacked for mere irregularities in the application for the homestead.—Brooks v. Tinsley, 79 S. E. 160.

§ 506 (Ga.App.) A wife and children, for whose benefit a homestead was set apart on the application of the husband and father, and who had enjoyed the benefit for years, could not, after his death, attack the validity of the exemption, merely because of formal defects in the application or judgment setting apart the homestead.—Brooks v. Tinsley, 79 S. E. 160.

(C) Proceedings.

§ 519 (Ga.) In an action on a forthcoming bond, conditioned to deliver the property "for sale," if the illegalities should be dismissed by the court or withdrawn, a plea alleging that the execution plaintiff, in violation of an agreement with defendant, dismissed the affidavits of illegality and refused to carry out the agreement of settlement, and praying that the agreement be enforced and the illegality cases be reinstated, was properly dismissed as a collateral attack on the judgment.—Evans v. Callaway, 79 S. E. 116.

XIII. MERGER AND BAR OF CAUSES OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

(B) Causes of Action and Defenses Merged, Barred, or Concluded.

§ 585 (N.C.) Judgment against defendant on notes covering all sums due at that time held not an estoppel as to a different cause of action not in issue in the former action.—J. T. McTeer Clothing Co. v. Hay, 79 S. E. 955.

§ 594 (Ga.App.) Where the contract of employment is entire, all the breaches occurring up to the commencement of the action must be included therein.—Willingham v. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., 79 S. E. 496.

One who claims a breach of contract of employment for a year, and alleges wrongful discharge  $4\frac{1}{2}$  months before the conclusion of the term, and after the year brings an action for the half of the salary for the month for which he was paid half, is estopped to sue for the salary for the succeeding 4 months.—Id.

(C) Persons Who may Take Advantage of the Bar.

§ 628 (Ga.App.) In an action on a joint contract, a judgment against one joint obligor merged the entire cause of action, and barred any subsequent suit on the same contract against the other debtor.—J. W. Scarborough & Co. v. Yarborough, 79 S. E. 1131.

XIV. CONCLUSIVENESS OF ADJUDICATION.

(B) Persons Concluded.

§ 668 (Ga.) In trespass against a corporation for cutting timber, an entry of service upon an individual in a former suit in which the plaintiff was adjudged an owner of the land is inadmissible to bind the corporation upon which no service was shown, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5579, allowing the plaintiff in ejectment to make the true claimant defendant by serving a copy of the action upon him.—Hodges v. Stuart Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 462.

(C) Matters Concluded.

§ 713 (N.C.) A judgment upon the merits is a finality as to the claim or demand in controversy, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose, and constitutes an absolute bar to a subsequent action.—J. T. McTeer Clothing Co. v. Hay, 79 S. E. 955.

§ 720 (N.C.) A prior judgment, holding that plaintiff was not entitled to a homestead in certain land conveyed to his son-in-law and sold under a deficiency judgment in foreclosure, held to estop plaintiff from thereafter maintaining a suit to recover the land as a homestead.—Cavanaugh v. Jarman, 79 S. E. 673.

§ 720 (W.Va.) Where causes of action, though growing out of the same transaction or relating to the same property or fund, are not the same, the record in the former suit does not estop the parties except as to matters affirmatively appearing to have been decided therein.—Pomeroy Nat. Bank v. Huntington Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 662.

Where a partner by an equity suit charged a bank with money deposited by the firm and successfully resisted the bank's defense of authorized payment to a partner by issuing to him, in exchange for the firm's check drawn by him, a certificate of deposit, but the record showed no actual adjudication against the indorsee of the certificate, a party to the suit, it was insufficient to sustain a plea of former adjudication in an action on the certificate by the indorsee.—Id.

§ 743 (Va.) One whose right to land had been adjudicated in a previous suit wherein she claimed that she conveyed it when an infant and so was entitled to disaffirm is concluded.—McCauley v. Grim, 79 S. E. 1041.

XV. LIEN.

§ 785 (Ga.App.) Where chattels were delivered under a conditional sale contract, and before it was recorded judgment was obtained against the buyer by a third person, the judgment lien took priority over the seller's unrecorded reservation of title, though the judgment was founded on a debt antecedent to the sale.—Phillips & Crew Co. v. Drake, 79 S. E. 952.

§ 795 (W.Va.) The lien of a judgment continues so long as the right to have execution issue or to bring an action of scire facias on it is not barred.—Lamon v. Gold, 79 S. E. 728.

Though a debtor's departure from and residence out of the state after judgment recovered against him may not obstruct the creditor in the enforcement of his lien, it suspends the running of the statute and preserves the lien.—Id.

§ 801 (W.Va.) Where a judgment is barred by limitations, it ceases to be a lien on the debtor's land and equity will not enforce it.—Lamon v. Gold, 79 S. E. 728.

The term "obstruct," as used in Code 1906, c. 104, § 18, adopted and made a part of chapter 139, § 11, authorizing deduction, from time within which proceedings to enforce judgment liens may be maintained, of periods of delay caused by act of the debtor by which he may "obstruct" the enforcement, does not mean to prevent altogether but rather to interrupt, to impede, or embarrass the creditor in the pursuit of any of his remedies.—Id.

The word "suit," as used in Code 1906, c.

139, §§ 10, 11, relating to proceedings for enforcement of judgment liens, means a suit in equity.—Id.

XIX. SUSPENSION, ENFORCEMENT, AND REVIVAL.

§ 853 (Ga.) A dated entry on the back of the execution, and entries on the execution docket showing the date of its issuance, without anything showing the date of entry of the f. fa. upon the execution docket, held not to constitute a sufficient compliance with Civ. Code 1910, §§ 4355, 4357, requiring that the execution docket show the date of entry of the f. fa., to prevent dormancy of the execution after seven years from rendition of the judgment.—Craven v. Martin, 79 S. E. 568.

§ 861 (Ga.) A void judgment will not be revived, under Civ. Code 1910, §§ 5073 et seq., providing for the revival of judgments.—Bell v. Verdel, 79 S. E. 849.

XXII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE OF JUDGMENT AS ESTOPPEL OR DEFENSE.

§ 948 (W.Va.) Res judicata must be pleaded or shown by the record.—Collins v. Board of Trustees of Davis and Elkins College, 79 S. E. 10.

§ 951 (W.Va.) Res judicata cannot be availed of by a mere citation to a published opinion.—Collins v. Board of Trustees of Davis and Elkins College, 79 S. E. 10.

§ 956 (N.C.) Under a claim of estoppel by judgment, extrinsic parol evidence is admissible to show the material points and the decision in the former action.—J. T. McTeer Clothing Co. v. Hay, 79 S. E. 955.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

JUDICIAL POWER.

See Constitutional Law, § 70.

JUDICIAL SALES.

See Execution, §§ 219-258; Executors and Administrators, § 402; Remainders; Taxation, §§ 730, 742.

§ 7 (W.Va.) Without authority of the court appointing him, a special commissioner to sell land cannot bring suit.—Monroe v. Hurry, 79 S. E. 830.

An order substituting a special commissioner in place of a previously appointed commissioner, who has defaulted in the performance of his duties, held not to authorize him to bring suit against the defaulting commissioner and the sureties on his official bond.—Id.

JURISDICTION.

See Abatement and Revival, § 85; Appeal and Error, §§ 456, 671; Appearance; Commerce, § 8; Courts; Criminal Law, §§ 88-101; Equity, §§ 26, 48; Exceptions, Bill of, § 43; Justices of the Peace, § 141; Lost Instruments, § 14; New Trial, § 114; Partition, § 113.

JURY.

See Appeal and Error, § 894; Criminal Law, §§ 178, 850, 864, 865, 923; New Trial, §§ 55, 153.

II. RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY.

§ 21 (N.C.) Where sentence upon a defendant is suspended upon certain conditions, the defendant is not entitled to a jury trial to determine whether he has violated the conditions.—State v. Everett, 79 S. E. 274.

IV. SUMMONING, ATTENDANCE, DISCHARGE, AND COMPENSATION.

§ 86 (Ga.) Two persons tried together for murder are entitled only to a panel of 48 jurors, and not to a panel of 96; they being deprived of no right thereby, where they have declined the severance offered them under Pen. Code 1910, § 995.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

V. COMPETENCY OF JURORS, CHALLENGES, AND OBJECTIONS.

§ 83 (Ga.App.) A justice of the peace held incompetent as a juror in a trial wherein he had received the affidavit and issued the warrant which was the basis of the accusation.—Evans v. State, 79 S. E. 916.

§ 110 (Ga.App.) Where accused accepted a juror before his strikes were exhausted, he waived his right to object that the juror was incompetent.—Taylor v. State, 79 S. E. 924.

The examination of a juror upon his voir dire exhausts the right of accused to inquire into his competency unless he puts him upon the judge as a trier and then proves some fact tending to establish that his answers on the voir dire were not true.—Id.

§ 110 (S.C.) Error in the rulings of the court in acceptance of jurors is waived by the defendant's withdrawing his plea of not guilty and entering a plea of guilty which was submitted to the jury to determine whether they would recommend mercy.—State v. Vaughn, 79 S. E. 312.

§ 116 (Ga.App.) That jurors had previously tried a similar case against another person afforded no ground for challenge to the array; the proper remedy being by challenge to the poll.—Quinlan v. State, 79 S. E. 768.

§ 116 (Ga.App.) That the panel of jurors heard the evidence introduced upon a previous trial of one jointly indicted with accused and after the conclusion of the evidence were ordered from the courtroom by the judge is not ground for challenge to the array but to the poll.—Kincaid v. State, 79 S. E. 770.

VI. IMPANELING FOR TRIAL AND OATH.

§ 149 (Ga.) Where, after selection of the jury and introduction of a part of plaintiff's evidence, defendant discovered that one juror was the guest of plaintiff's local attorney and requested that such juror be withdrawn and the trial proceed with 11 jurors, which request was refused by plaintiff, the court erred in denying defendant's request then made to declare a mistrial.—Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 1113.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

See Certiorari, § 70; Criminal Law, §§ 369, 376, 419, 420; Jury, § 83; Landlord and Tenant, § 315; Time, § 5.

IV. PROCEDURE IN CIVIL CASES.

§ 91 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff's pleading in a justice's court, in an action against a railroad company for killing live stock, fails to allege even in general terms that the killing was due to defendant's negligence, it is subject to a special demurrer therefor.—South Georgia Ry. Co. v. Atkins, 79 S. E. 226.

§ 92 (Ga.App.) Unless the answer in an action before a justice is a dilatory plea, or a defense to an unconditional contract in writing, it need not be filed at the first term.—Willingham v. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., 79 S. E. 493.

§ 97 (Ga.App.) In an action before a justice, not founded on an unconditional contract in writing, the plea of defendant need not be verified.—Willingham v. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., 79 S. E. 496.

§ 125 (Ga.App.) An announcement of a justice of the peace in open court that he will render judgment in a particular way is of no effect until the judgment is actually entered.—Duke v. State, 79 S. E. 861.

§ 127 (N.C.) Notice of a motion before a justice of the peace to set aside a judgment recovered by a nonresident plaintiff, for want of service of the summons, might be given by publication or by service on plaintiff's attorney of record.—Ballard v. Lowery, 79 S. E. 968.

Upon motion to set aside justice's judgment, docketed in the superior court, for want of service, held that, upon application to the clerk accompanied by the required bond, the execution would be recalled until disposition of the motion.—Id.

§ 128 (N.C.) Where judgment was rendered by the justice without service of process, but the record on its face showed such service, the proper remedy was by a motion to set aside the judgment, and the service could not be impeached by injunction.—Ballard v. Lowery, 79 S. E. 968.

V. REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS.

(A) Appeal and Error.

§ 141 (Ga.App.) An appeal to the superior court, being strictly statutory, will not lie from a justice's judgment establishing copies of lost papers, though such papers are part of a record in a suit involving a claim above $50; certiorari being the proper remedy, Civ. Code 1910, §§ 6524, 4742, 4738, 4998, not authorizing an appeal in such case.—Humphrey v. Johnson, 79 S. E. 530.

The question whether the amount involved is sufficient to give jurisdiction on appeal from a justice's judgment must be determined by the summons and the cause of action thereto attached.—Id.

§ 171 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5014, an appeal from a justice is an investigation de novo.—Willingham v. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., 79 S. E. 496.

§ 174 (Ga.App.) Where a case is appealed from a justice to a superior court, defendant must reduce his defense to writing, though it may in effect be a mere amendment to the plea originally filed in the justice court.—Willingham v. Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., 79 S. E. 496.

That defendant must on appeal from a justice reduce his defense to writing does not preclude him from the right of further amending his plea on the trial, under Civ. Code 1910, § 4739.—Id.

§ 175 (W.Va.) In view of Code 1906, c. 50, § 168, requiring a justice of the peace to transmit on appeal depositions within 20 days, depositions regularly taken and read as evidence on the trial before a justice may be read in the circuit court on appeal.—Cable Co. v. Mathers, 79 S. E. 1079.

(B) Certiorari.

§ 194 (N.C.) Where a writ of recordari is desired to compel a justice of the peace to send up the record in a case where the defendant defaulted and lost the right of appeal, defendant has the burden of showing excusable neglect as well as a reasonably meritorious defense.—Hunter v. Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 610.

As every member of a law firm is charged with knowledge of all the business of the firm, the illness of one member of a law firm which prevented him from attending a trial in justice court, and thus caused defendant to suffer a default judgment and lose its right of appeal, is not a showing of excusable neglect which will warrant the issuance of a writ of recordari.—Id.

§ 196 (Ga.App.) An appeal to the superior court, being strictly statutory, will not lie from a justice's judgment establishing copies of lost papers, though such papers are part of a record in a suit involving a claim above $50; certiorari being the proper remedy, Civ. Code, §§

6524, 4742, 4738, 4998, not authorizing an appeal in such case.—Humphrey v. Johnson, 79 S. E. 530.

§ 197 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action in a justice court to foreclose a mortgage, the justice's judgment found against defendant's claim that the property was exempt from the mortgage debt, and held the property subject, and the defendant failed, on certiorari brought in the superior court, to show any legal reason why this judgment was erroneous, the certiorari should have been overruled.—Salter v. Bet-tison, 79 S. E. 358.

§ 202 (Ga.App.) The assignments of error in a petition for a writ of certiorari to review a judgment of a justice of the peace in proceedings to foreclose a laborer's lien held to be sufficiently specific to prevent a dismissal of the certiorari on the ground of their uncertainty.—Ballard v. Daniel, 79 S. E. 376.

§ 203 (Ga.App.) Where the written notice of the sanction of a certiorari and of the time and place of hearing, required by Civ. Code 1910, § 5190, is not given at least ten days before the time fixed by law for the beginning of the term to which the writ is returnable, and failure to give such notice is not due to a providential cause, the certiorari should be dismissed.—Watson v. American Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 586.

As used in Civ. Code 1910, § 5190, providing that a notice of certiorari shall be given at least ten days before "the sitting of the court," the quoted phrase refers to the day fixed when the court must begin to sit for the disposition of cases, and is equivalent to the phrase "the first day of the term."—Id.

§ 208 (Ga.App.) The burden of showing error in a judgment of the justice of the peace is upon the plaintiff in certiorari, and where the record shows that the other party was entitled to recover some amount, and does not show the amount of the judgment, the certiorari will be overruled.—Ludden & Bates Southern Music House v. Hale, 79 S. E. 495.

§ 209 (N.C.) Where a judgment, granting a writ of recordari to bring up a judgment of a justice, was reversed and remanded, the trial court might properly permit the filing of additional affidavits by the petitioner.—Hunter v. Atlantic Coast Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 610.

II. LEASES AND AGREEMENTS IN GENERAL.

(B) Construction and Operation.

§ 37 (Va.) The language of a lease is to be construed most strongly against the lessor.—Stonegap Colliery Co. v. Kelly & Vicars, 79 S. E. 341.

The intention of the parties to a lease must be ascertained by reference to the entire instrument and not to disjointed parts of it.—Id.

IV. TERMS FOR YEARS.

(D) Termination.

§ 112 (Ga.) Where a landlord, after suing out a warrant to summarily dispossess the tenant, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5385, for failure to pay rent, accepted rent which accrued after the summary process, he waived his right to claim a forfeiture of the lease because of the tenant's arrears prior to such process.—Guptill v. Macon Stone Supply Co., 79 S. E. 854.

VI. TENANCIES AT WILL AND AT SUFFERANCE.

§ 119 (Ga.) Where a tenant for a year continues in possession without right after expiration of his term, he is a "tenant at sufferance."—Stanley v. Stembbridge, 79 S. E. 842.

VII. PREMISES AND ENJOYMENT AND USE THEREOF.

(B) Possession, Enjoyment, and Use.

§ 134 (Va.) Equity will not raise by implication a covenant in restraint of a beneficial use of leased premises.—Stonagap Colliery Co. v. Kelly & Vicars, 79 S. E. 341.

A covenant that premises shall be used for a specified purpose does not impliedly forbid their use for a similar lawful purpose which is not injurious to the rights of the landlord.—Id.

(D) Repairs, Insurance, and Improvements.

§ 150 (Ga.App.) In the absence of any agreement to do so, a landlord need not repair patent defects of which the tenant knew when he rented the building.—Moore v. Rosser, 79 S. E. 246.

§ 150 (N.C.) The changing of a gate which swung outward so as to make it swing inward would be a change in the condition of the premises, and not technically a "repair," so that the duty of making it was upon the landlord.—Knight v. Foster, 79 S. E. 614.

(E) Injuries from Dangerous or Defective Condition.

§ 167 (N.C.) A landlord is only liable to third persons for injuries caused by failure to repair the premises where he contracts to repair or knowingly rents the premises in a condition which is dangerous or which amounts to a nuisance, or where he authorizes a wrongful act.—Knight v. Foster, 79 S. E. 614.

A landlord who knowingly rented premises when the gate thereto swung outward so as to be dangerous to pedestrians was liable for personal injuries resulting from the condition of the gate seven years thereafter.—Id.

VIII. RENT AND ADVANCES.

(A) Rights and Liabilities.

§ 196 (N.C.) The landlord on breach of contract by failure to pay rent and on holding over by the tenant is not confined to the rent stipulated in the lease, but may consider the fair rental value of the property; such "rental value" being, not the probable profits that might accrue to the landlord, but the value as ascertained by proof of what the premises would rent for, or of facts from which value might be determined.—Martin v. Clegg, 79 S. E. 1105.

§ 216 (Ga.) In a proceeding under Civ. Code 1910, § 5385 et seq., to dispossess a tenant, plaintiff cannot recover double rent except after a demand for possession.—Stanley v. Stembbridge, 79 S. E. 842.

The double rent recoverable under Civ. Code 1910, § 5389, where a tenant refuses to surrender possession after expiration of his term and a demand, is double the rental value of the property and not double the contract price.—Id.

§ 216 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 5385, which authorizes the summary removal of tenants for failure to pay rent, cannot be used as a means to collect double rent pursuant to section 5389, after the landlord has accepted rent accruing after the summary process.—Guptill v. Macon Stone Supply Co., 79 S. E. 854.

§ 216 (Ga.) Where, in a landlord's proceedings to dispossess a tenant, plaintiff testified to a demand for possession, but did not specify the date thereof, and defendant denied such demand, there could be no recovery of double rent for any time before the commencement of the proceedings.—Hindman v. Raper, 79 S. E. 945.

(B) Actions.

§ 217 (Ga.) A proceeding under Civ. Code 1910, § 5385 et seq., to dispossess a tenant is not a proper method of collecting single rent due by contract, prior to demand for possession.—Stanley v. Stembbridge, 79 S. E. 842.

§ 229 (Va.) Under Code 1904, § 2791, making an undertenant's goods liable for rent, and section 2962, rendering goods liable to be distrained liable to attachment, the goods of an undertenant may be attached for rent not due, as well as for rent past due, where he has removed same from the leased premises in violation of the latter section.—Bernard v. McClanahan, 79 S. E. 1059.

An undertenant's goods may be attached for rent under Code 1904, § 2962, authorizing the attachment, and section 2791, making an undertenant liable for rent, though an action at law brought to recover the rent never matures for hearing.—Id.

Where an order in attachment proceedings for rent under Code 1904, § 2962, was in the usual form and stated that the goods levied on were liable and ordered a sale, it was not objectionable as being a personal judgment, instead of merely in rem, in an action wherein jurisdiction was not obtained over defendant's person.—Id.

§ 231 (Ga.) Where the rental was a specified amount of cotton and the only evidence, in a proceeding under Civ. Code 1910, § 5385 et seq., to dispossess the tenant, as to the value of the place for rent after the expiration of the term, was that it was worth a stated number of pounds of cotton, a verdict finding a stated sum of money as rent for the term and another sum as rent for the time defendant held over was not supported by the evidence.—Stanley v. Stembbridge, 79 S. E. 842.

(D) Distress.

§ 270 (Ga.App.) Evidence of the annual rental value of the premises is immaterial in distress proceedings, where the tenant agreed in writing to pay a specified annual rental.—Moore v. Rosser, 79 S. E. 246.

Where in distress proceedings each party claimed damages for breach of contract by the other, it was not error to instruct that the damages on one side should be set off against those on the other, and only the net amount be allowed the tenant as a deduction from the amount of the distress warrant.—Id.

IX. RE-ENTRY AND RECOVERY OF POSSESSION BY LANDLORD.

§ 285 (N.C.) In an action to recover possession of leased property from the tenant holding over, where the plaintiff was permitted to show that the fair rental value of the premises from November 1, 1909, to January 1, 1913, above the stipulated rental was a certain amount, it was error to exclude the defendant's evidence that the rental value since November 1, 1909, was much less than that claimed by the plaintiff.—Martin v. Clegg, 79 S. E. 1105.

§ 296 (N.C.) A summary proceeding under the landlord and tenant act, Revisal 1905, § 2001, and the following sections, to oust tenants holding over after the expiration of their term, can only be maintained where the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties.—

McIver v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 1107.

§ 298 (Ga.) In an action under Civ. Code 1910, § 5385 et seq., to dispossess a tenant, it was no defense that defendant had heard that his original landlord, plaintiff's grantor, had sold the property and he had thereupon given a rental note to plaintiff's agent, and that thereafter his original landlord had told him that she had not sold the place, whereupon he paid her the rent and agreed to rent from her for another year and remained in possession.—Stanley v. Stembbridge, 79 S. E. 842.

§ 308 (Ga.) The rent note was admissible in evidence, in a proceeding under Civ. Code 1910, § 5385 et seq., to dispossess a tenant, to show that the rent was unpaid and that the note was held by plaintiff, though plaintiff was the assignee of the note and the payee was his agent.—Stanley v. Stembbridge, 79 S. E. 842.

In a proceeding under Civ. Code 1910, § 5385 et seq., to dispossess a tenant, a deed from the defendant's original landlord to plaintiff was properly admitted in evidence, though defendant had made a new rental contract for the same term with plaintiff through an agent.—Id.

§ 308 (N.C.) Evidence in a summary proceeding under the landlord and tenant act held not to show that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties.—McIver v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 1107.

§ 315 (N.C.) If the relation of landlord and tenant is not shown to exist, so that a summary proceeding under the landlord and tenant act, Revisal 1905, § 2001, and the following sections, could not be maintained, the proceeding should be dismissed by the superior court on appeal from a justice, and plaintiff required to bring ejectment in the superior court if he claims title.—McIver v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 1107.

LANDS.

See Public Lands.

LARCENY.

See Criminal Law, § 1205; Embezzlement; Receiving Stolen Goods; Trover and Conversion, §§ 25, 40.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

§ 3 (Ga.App.) It is not sufficient to constitute the crime of larceny that the defendant shall have fraudulently violated the rights of the owner, but it is essential that the taking shall have been with intent to steal.—Russell v. State, 79 S. E. 495.

§ 3 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for stealing a cow, it was error to instruct that although defendants killed the cow accidentally, yet if they thereafter formed the intent to convert the carcass to their own use, they would be guilty.—Hunter v. State, 79 S. E. 752.

§ 15 (Ga.App.) Where possession of goods is delivered under an agreement to sell the same for the owner's benefit and to return either the proceeds or the goods, and the goods are converted, the conversion is not simple larceny as defined by Civ. Code 1910, § 152, unless the defendant fraudulently induced the owner to surrender the goods, intending at the time to appropriate them to his own use.—Pittman v. State, 79 S. E. 915.

§ 15 (N.C.) Where defendant broke open a letter intrusted to him to mail and abstracted money therefrom, he was guilty of larceny.—State v. Ruffin, 79 S. E. 417.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

(A) Indictment and Information.

§ 32 (Ga.App.) An indictment under Pen. Code 1910, § 163, charging the taking away of a paper relating to real or personal estate with intent to destroy the same, need not allege ownership of the paper taken and carried away.—Hanson v. State, 79 S. E. 176.

§ 40 (Ga.App.) Where the accusation laid the title of stolen property in the levying officer, and the undisputed evidence showed that there had been no legal levy, a conviction of larceny was unauthorized.—Russell v. State, 79 S. E. 495.

(B) Evidence.

§ 55 (Ga.App.) Circumstantial evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction of larceny.—Barlow v. State, 79 S. E. 93.

§ 63 (Ga.App.) Evidence merely that defendant failed to pay for, and converted to his own use, goods received under an agreement to sell the same and return to the owner either the proceeds or the unsold goods was insufficient to sustain a finding that he fraudulently induced the plaintiff to surrender the goods, intending to appropriate them.—Pittman v. State, 79 S. E. 915.

§ 24 (S.C.) Where life tenants mortgaged the land and on paying the mortgage had it assigned to them, they did not become mortgagees in possession for the purpose of applying the rents and profits to the payment of the mortgage.—Bethea v. Allen, 79 S. E. 639.

LIFE INSURANCE.

LIGHTS.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

LI. STATUTES OF LIMITATION.

(B) Limitations Applicable to Particular Actions.

§ 21 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, §§ 4362, 4368, providing a limitation of four years for actions for breach of contract, express or implied, do not apply to an action by a trustee in bankruptcy, under Bankruptcy Act, § 60b, against a transferee for value of goods received from the bankrupt in payment of a pre-existing debt less than four months prior to the filing of the petition.—Arnold Grocery Co. v. Shackelford, 79 S. E. 470.

§ 29 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, §§ 4362, 4368, providing a limitation of four years for actions on open accounts, do not apply to an action by a trustee in bankruptcy, under Bankruptcy Act, § 60b, against a transferee for value of goods received from the bankrupt in payment of a pre-existing debt less than four months prior to the filing of the petition.—Arnold Grocery Co. v. Shackelford, 79 S. E. 470.

LI. COMPUTATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION.

(A) Accrual of Right of Action or Defense.

§ 46 (W.Va.) Where an oral contract for continuous services provides that payment therefor shall be postponed until the death of the promisor, or provision made therefor in his will, limitations do not begin to run until the happening of the contemplated event.—Hotsin-piller v. Hotsin-piller, 79 S. E. 936.

V. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 182 (N.C.) Federal Employer's Liability Act of 1908, § 6, providing that no action shall be maintained under the act unless commenced within two years, is a statute of limitation, and not a condition inherent in the right of action, and must be pleaded by defendant.—Burnett v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 414.

LIQUOR SELLING.

See Intoxicating Liquors.

LIS PENDENS.

§ 7 (N.C.) Purchasers of property pending suit to correct the deed thereto on the ground that it was obtained by fraud and undue influence held to hold it subject to the results of the suit.—Lamm v. Lamm, 79 S. E. 290.

LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS.

See Master and Servant, § 302.

§ 6 (W.Va.) No garage keeper, in the exercise of reasonable care, can release a car left in his custody to another than the owner without the latter's order.—McLain v. West Virginia Automobile Co., 79 S. E. 731.

§ 7 (W.Va.) The keeper of a garage for hire is bound to exercise reasonable diligence to keep safely an automobile left in his custody.—McLain v. West Virginia Automobile Co., 79 S. E. 731.

A count in assumpsit, charging a garage keeper with the duty to take proper care of an automobile left in his custody, and to care for it without damage or injury, does not charge a higher degree of care than the law enjoins.—Id.

A custom of garage keepers, contrary to the implied obligation of reasonable care in favor of an automobile owner storing his car at a public garage, does not absolve the garage keeper from observance of such care.—Id.

§ 11 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3479, a bailor for hire warrants a thing bailed to be free from any secret fault affecting the purpose for which it is hired, and livery stable keepers are bound in that regard to exercise ordinary care, which is such care as cautious men are accustomed to use under similar circumstances, but not the extraordinary diligence required of carriers.—Parker v. G. O. Loving & Co., 79 S. E. 77.

Where one hires a carriage, the owner owes to each member of the family using it the same degree of care as is owing to the person to whom the vehicle is let, whether the owner has knowledge that the vehicle is to be employed for carriage of any other person than he to whom it is let or not.—Id.

§ 2 (N.C.) Where a grantor conveyed timber with the right to the grantee to remove same within 10 years, with option of extension of 5 years, and afterwards conveyed the land, but expressly excepted the timber previously conveyed, making a reference to that deed, a grant of the 5 years' extension by the grantor after she had parted with title of land to the grantee was valid.—Powell v. Fosburg Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 272; Cooper v. Same, Id.

§ 3 (Ga.App.) Where a written contract of sale of standing timber was entered into, and one-half the purchase money paid, the title to the timber passed immediately to the purchaser, in so far as it affected the rights of innocent persons who subsequently bought from the purchaser lumber cut from the timber, though there was a verbal agreement, of which such innocent persons had no knowledge, between the seller and the purchaser that the title to the timber should not pass until it was cut.—Davis v. Cox, 79 S. E. 383.

§ 3 (N.C.) Vendee of standing timber, in order to obtain extension of time for removing it, held bound to comply strictly with the contract by giving notice of its intention to exercise its right to the extension, and tendering the consideration therefor within the time originally provided.—Eureka Lumber Co. v. Whitley, 79 S. E. 268.

Vendee of standing timber held not to have exercised due diligence, as a matter of law, in giving notice of its intention to exercise its option to extend the time for removing it, by placing the consideration in the hands of the sheriff, with instructions to deliver.—Id.

§ 3 (N.C.) Where, at the time of plaintiff's conveyance of certain timber to defendant's intestate, the latter executed a license to plaintiff to cut timber on a part of the tract, and later conveyed all the timber to G., who cut the timber from the reserved portion, intestate's personal representative was not liable therefor; C.'s authority to cut having been derived from a new deed from plaintiff.—Warwick v. Taylor, 79 S. E. 283.

§ 3 (N.C.) Where the owners of the timber on a certain tract of land, with a limited time in which to cut it, subsequently acquired title to the land from one whose grantor excepted from the deed the right to cut timber, which had been previously conveyed by him to another, the right to cut timber did not merge with the title, and after the expiration of the right, the holder of the subsequent right became the owner of the timber.—W. J. Downing Lumber Co. v. Riley, 79 S. E. 605.

§ 3 (N.C.) Contract for the sale of growing timber held in effect a conveyance passing a present interest therein, defeasible as to all timber not cut within the time limit prescribed, and not a mere executory agreement during such period.—Wilson v. Scarboro, 79 S. E. 811.

§ 3 (N.C.) An assignee of rights of a grantee under conveyance of standing timber, providing that grantee would build a railroad, or pay a specified penalty, held bound by the grantee's covenant.—Herring v. Wallace Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 876.

§ 3 (S.C.) Where a timber deed did not fix any time for removal, it must be within a reasonable time.—Gresham v. Atlantic Coast Lumber Corporation, 79 S. E. 799.

An exception of the timber on land is for the benefit of the grantor, even though the grantor's predecessor had conveyed the timber under a deed which merely gave the grantee a reasonable time in which to remove it, and does not inure to the benefit of the grantee of the timber.—Id.

§ 3 (S.C.) Under conveyance of standing timber except such as might be necessary for plantation use, held, that enough timber should be left to supply the present and future needs of the plantation and that the grantor's right was not limited to a right to use timber on the plantation until such time as the grantee completed the removal thereof.—Marion County Lumber Co. v. Hodges, 79 S. E. 1096.

Grantor held not entitled to set apart a tract of timber and exclude grantee therefrom unless with all other uncut timber such tract was necessary to satisfy the exception.—Id.

Under such grant, held that only so much was reserved as was required for the needs of the plantation as it then existed, although the grantor thereafter brought additional land into cultivation.—Id.

Evidence on application for temporary injunction held to show that a tract from which the grantor had excluded the grantee was not necessary for plantation use.—Id.

§ 25 (Ga.App.) The lien provided for by Civ. Code 1910, § 3358, applies to timber or logs severed from the soil, but not to standing trees, although sold to be severed and converted into lumber.—Davis v. Cox, 79 S. E. 383.

§ 28 (Ga.App.) The lien of a sawmill proprietor, provided for by Civ. Code 1910, § 3358, not asserted in the manner prescribed by section 3354 by recording within 10 days, is lost on possession of the property being surrendered to the debtor.—Richardson v. Mallory, 79 S. E. 362.

§ 33 (Ga.App.) Where an execution has been issued on foreclosure of a lien given by Civ. Code 1910, § 3358, for timber furnished for a sawmill, and a counter affidavit has been filed and a claim interposed to the levy, the claimant may attack the validity of the lien, though defendant has withdrawn his counter affidavit before trial of the claim case.—Davis v. Cox, 79 S. E. 383.

LOST INSTRUMENTS.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 871, 1052; Justices of the Peace, §§ 141, 196.

§ 14 (W.Va.) Equity has jurisdiction to enforce the liability of the obligors on the lost bond of a defaulting bank cashier.—Clark v. Nickell, 79 S. E. 1020.

§ 16 (W.Va.) Where, after diligent search for a cashier's bond, the bank brings an allowable action in equity upon the lost bond, discovery and production of the bond thereafter will not defeat its right to relief in the pending suit.—Clark v. Nickell, 79 S. E. 1020.

§ 23 (Va.) Where in a suit for partition plaintiff's alleged title rested on an alleged deed by defendant which had been lost, strong and convincing proof of its former existence, its loss, and its contents would be required.—Leftwich v. Early, 79 S. E. 384.

IV. TERMINATION OF PROSECUTION.

§ 34 (N.C.) Before an action for malicious prosecution can be instituted, it is necessary that the proceedings on which it is based shall have terminated.—Brinkley v. Knight, 79 S. E. 260.

§ 35 (N.C.) A criminal prosecution held not terminated when plaintiff instituted suit for malicious prosecution; the discharge of plaintiff having been made by the constable on the failure of the justice to appear on the date set for trial.—Brinkley v. Knight, 79 S. E. 260.

V. ACTIONS.

§ 47 (Ga.App.) A petition alleging that on complaint of defendant plaintiff was arrested, and in accordance with his bond appeared at five separate terms of court when he was informed that the case had been dropped, sets forth an action for malicious prosecution within Civ. Code 1910, § 4439, defining it as a prosecution "maliciously carried on and without any probable cause where any damage ensues to the person prosecuted."—Mimbs v. Battle, 79 S. E. 922.

MANDAMUS.

II. SUBJECTS AND PURPOSES OF RELIEF.

(B) Acts and Proceedings of Public Officers and Boards and Municipalities.

§ 73 (S.C.) The institution by municipality of proceedings to ascertain the amount of compensation due in a condemnation case is a plain ministerial duty, and can be enforced by mandamus.—Parrish v. Town of Yorkville, 79 S. E. 635.

§ 111 (N.C.) Mandamus was a proper remedy to enforce an order of the judge of the superior court requiring a county to pay all expenses of a chemical analysis of the stomach of a person believed to have been murdered.—Withers v. Board of Com'rs of Columbus County, 79 S. E. 615.

MANSLAUGHTER.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) Creation and Existence.

§ 1 (Va.) Where plaintiff at the age of 13 applied for the position of servant to deceased, who took him into his home and furnished him with shelter, food, and clothing in return for small personal services, but there was no contract, express or implied, to pay plaintiff any money consideration for his services, no other relation than that of master and servant existed between the parties.—Starke v. Storm's Ex'r, 79 S. E. 1057.

§ 6 (W.Va.) Evidence in an action by a carpenter held insufficient to show, as against a verdict for plaintiff, that an employment contract was a fabrication.—McGuire v. Old Sweet Springs Co., 79 S. E. 350.

II. SERVICES AND COMPENSATION.

(A) Performance of Services.

§ 67 (Ga.App.) An intent to defraud, coexistent with the making of a contract, is an essential element of the offense of violating Pen. Code 1910, § 715.—Johnson v. State, 79 S. E. 524.

Under Pen. Code 1910, § 716, a failure without good cause to perform services contracted for and to return money advanced may be presumptive evidence of fraudulent intent in cheating and swindling in violation of section 715.—Id.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code 1910, § 715, either the performance of the services or the repayment of the advancement is a complete defense.—Id.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code 1910, § 715, the burden is on the prosecution to prove, not only that the services contracted for were not performed, but also that the advances with interest thereon had not been repaid at or before the time fixed for the commencement of the services.—Id.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code 1910, § 715, the burden is on the prosecution to prove that accused had no good excuse for his failure to perform his contract or to repay the advancement.—Id.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code 1910, § 715, evidence that defendant made a false affidavit that he was not under any other contract of service at the time of the advancement made for him by the prosecutor, the making of which affidavit would subject him to prosecution under section 719, held insufficient to show fraudulent intent or to authorize his conviction.—Id.

§ 67 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for violating the labor contract act, the burden is on the state to prove that the hirer sustained a loss capable of definite computation.—Mobley v. State, 79 S. E. 906.

The labor contract act is intended to apply only to inflict punishment for obtaining advances by fraud with intent to cheat and not to afford machinery for the collection of debts.—Id.

Evidence, in a prosecution for violating the labor contract act, held insufficient to sustain a conviction.—Id.

§ 67 (Ga.App.) A writing containing a promise to labor, but which does not prescribe the work to be performed, is too indefinite to afford a basis for a prosecution under Pen. Code 1910, § 715.—Small v. State, 79 S. E. 1134.

A writing held not sufficiently definite to support a prosecution under Pen. Code 1910, § 715.—Id.

§ 67 (N.C.) In a prosecution for obtaining supplies under a promise to labor, with intent to cheat and defraud, evidence held insufficient to show a fraudulent intent so as to sustain a conviction.—State v. Isley, 79 S. E. 1105.

(B) Wages and Other Remuneration.

§ 69 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 3812, requiring corporations to pay wages to discharged employes within 24 hours after demand, held, constitutional.—Wynne v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 521.

§ 78 (Va.) On facts showing the creation of the relation of master and servant between an adult and the infant plaintiff, without any express agreement as to the compensation, held that there was an implied obligation to feed, clothe, and lodge the servant.—Starke v. Storm's Ex'r, 79 S. E. 1057.

Where the relation of master and servant, arose between deceased and an infant servant, whereby the master, in the absence of any agreement for wages, was to furnish food, clothing, and lodging, there was no obligation on the part of the master to educate the servant.—Id.

§ 80 (Va.) Where a master took a boy of 13 into his home without express agreement to pay for services, held not to raise a presumption that the infant plaintiff expected to be paid or the master to pay therefor.—Starke v. Storm's Ex'r, 79 S. E. 1057.

§ 83 (S.C.) Civ. Code 1912, § 3812, requiring corporations to pay earned wages to discharged employes within 24 hours after demand on pain of a penalty, held not to apply where the claim is not a just debt, or where the laborer prevents payment by his own conduct, nor does it preclude the interposition of a valid defense or counterclaim.—Wynne v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 521.

III. MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT.

(A) Nature and Extent in General.

§ 87 (N.C.) Federal Employer's Liability Act of 1908 creates no right that did not exist at common law, since the change of the law as to contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and negligence of a fellow servant only withdraws a defense, and does not affect the right.—Burnett v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 414.

§ 92 (W.Va.) A master who employs a physician to treat employes, and collects monthly fees from their wages, which are given to the physician as his compensation, is not liable for the physician's malpractice, unless he was negligent in selecting or retaining him.—Guy v. Lanark Fuel Co., 79 S. E. 941.

Where a master selects a competent physician to treat his employees, he may rely on the presumption that his competency will continue until notice of a change.—Id.

To constitute constructive notice of the reputation of a physician employed by defendant to treat his employees, the reputation must be so general and notorious that ignorance shows negligence of the master.—Id.

Where the reasons which are relied on to charge the master with knowledge of the reputation of a physician employed to treat the employees apply with equal force to show knowledge by the servant treated, the negligence of the latter in not complaining is as great as that of the master in retaining the physician.—Id.

§ 95 (Ga.) The employment of a boy in a factory in violation of the child labor law of 1906 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3144) § 2, is negligence per se, and renders the employer liable for injuries proximately resulting from the employment.—Elk Cotton Mills v. Grant, 79 S. E. 836.

§ 96 (Ga.) Where a boy employed in violation of the child labor law of 1906 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3144) § 2, is injured from some cause wholly disconnected from his employment, there can be no recovery against the master for his injury.—Elk Cotton Mills v. Grant, 79 S. E. 836.

§ 97 (Va.) An employer is not bound to foresee and obviate things which prudent men would not expect to happen.—Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Goble, 79 S. E. 1036.

§ 100 (N.C.) The acceptance of benefits from a relief department does not prevent a recovery of damages for negligence under the federal Employer's Liability Act of 1908.—Burnett v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 414.

(B) Tools, Machinery, Appliances, and Places for Work.

§§ 101, 102 (N.C.) A master operating machinery must supply such appliances as are known, approved, and in general use, and a failure so to do will constitute negligence.—Bird v. Bell Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 448.

§ 107 (Ga.) The duty of a master as to furnishing a safe place in which to work does not apply to such places as are constantly shifting as a result of the servant's labor, and where the work necessarily changes the character for safety of the place in which it is done.—Thomas v. Georgia Granite Co., 79 S. E. 130.

§ 111 (N.C.) Where the steps of a baggage car were torn away by contact with certain boxes negligently left near the track by defendant, held, that defendant was guilty of actionable negligence, creating liability for injury to a baggageman.—Ferebee v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 685.

§ 114 (N.C.) A railroad is not liable for injuries to a section hand who left the track at a place of his own selection to get a drink of water, and in going down the side of a fill fell over a snag left there when the bushes were cut from the right of way by the company.—Williams v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 79 S. E. 601.

§ 129 (N.C.) Where a railroad company negligently left a quantity of boxes near its track and they toppled over and broke the steps of a passing baggage car, resulting in injury to the baggageman, defendant was not relieved from liability because an unexpected and unusual storm contributed to the accident.—Ferebee v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 685.

(D) Warning and Instructing Servant.

§ 155 (Ga.App.) Where an adult servant was injured by his clothing catching in a revolving shaft on which was a set screw, and the danger thereof was obvious, the failure of the master to instruct in relation to the danger did not render him liable for the injury.—Holton v. Hebard Cypress Co., 79 S. E. 85.

§ 155 (Ga.App.) Where the danger is obvious, and as easily known to the servant as to the master, the latter will not be liable for failing to give warning of it.—Beck v. A. N. Tumlin Co., 79 S. E. 587.

(E) Fellow Servants.

§ 159 (Ga.App.) Except in the case of railroad companies, a servant cannot recover for personal injuries caused solely by a fellow servant's negligence.—Beck v. A. N. Tumlin Co., 79 S. E. 587.

§ 177 (N.C.) An employer is not liable for the injuries of an employee caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.—Page v. Sprunt, 79 S. E. 619.

§ 187 (S.C.) The acts of a vice principal are those of a master, and, if he negligently directs the servant to work at an improper machine, the master is liable.—Smith v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1099.

(F) Risks Assumed by Servant.

§ 204 (Ga.) Where an 11 year old boy is employed in a factory in violation of the child labor law of 1906 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3144) § 2, he does not assume the risks incident to such employment.—Elk Cotton Mills v. Grant, 79 S. E. 836.

§ 206 (Ga.) A servant assumes the ordinary risks of his employment.—Thomas v. Georgia Granite Co., 79 S. E. 130.

(G) Contributory Negligence of Servant.

§ 228 (Ga.) Where injuries to a boy while employed in violation of the child labor law of 1906 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3144) § 2, were due to a cause wholly disconnected from his employment, the defense of contributory negligence is available.—Elk Cotton Mills v. Grant, 79 S. E. 836.

§ 228 (Ga.App.) In a railroad employee's action under the federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries, plaintiff need not show that he was free from fault.—Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 932.

§ 229 (Ga.) A servant is bound to exercise his own diligence to protect himself.—Thomas v. Georgia Granite Co., 79 S. E. 130.

§ 230 (Va.) The fact that, after the father of a minor consented to his employment on the understanding that he should not do work of a dangerous character, the master assigned him to dangerous work would not estop the master from setting up the defense of contributory negligence to defeat a recovery.—Powhatan Lime Co. v. Affeck's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1054.

§ 235 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff's injuries were due either to a fellow servant's negligence or to visible defects in the machinery, and he had equal means with the master of knowing such defects or dangers, the court properly awarded a nonsuit.—Beck v. A. N. Tumlin Co., 79 S. E. 587.

§ 238 (N.C.) Where a servant who had charge of a cotton gin, and whose duty it was to attend to repairs, used a hoe handle to shift the power belt after the shifting levers were broken, and was injured, he cannot recover, as his injury was due to his failure to have the levers repaired.—Bird v. Bell Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 448.

§ 240 (Va.) Where there was no chock under the wheel of a car on a siding next to an embankment on the premises of a lime company, and a servant gave a signal to move the car and walked across the track to the other side next to the embankment, where there was no necessity for his going, he was guilty of contributory negligence.—Powhatan Lime Co. v. Affeck's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1054.

§ 246 (Ga.App.) Where a fireman is injured in jumping from the engine after it has been signaled to stop because of an impending wreck due to defendant's negligence, and after the engineer has jumped, acting in the belief that his life is in peril, he may recover under the federal Employers' Liability Act, though the train does not actually run off the track.—Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 932.

The question whether a fireman was justified in jumping from his engine in an emergency depends upon whether he used ordinary care under the apparent circumstances, and not upon the true conditions as they may have appeared to other persons in a better position to ascertain the real facts.—Id.

(H) Actions.

§ 250½ [New, vol. 15 Key-No. Series] (S.C.) The federal Employers' Liability Act being general in its terms, the rules of evidence as to the quantity of proof necessary to make out a prima facie case of negligence is that which prevails in the state where the action is brought.—Bennett v. Southern Ry.-Carolina Division, 79 S. E. 710.

§ 264 (S.C.) In an action for injuries to a railroad engineer by the alleged incompetency of his fireman, a general allegation of his fireman's unfitness and knowledge of defendant's foreman thereof held to justify the admission of evidence of prior instances of the fireman's improper meddling with the engine, and that other employes had complained to the foreman of the fireman's incompetency.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

§ 265 (Ga.) Though the federal Employers' Liability Act provides that contributory negligence on the part of an injured employe shall not defeat recovery, such employe is required to show by his evidence that his injuries resulted in whole or in part from the negligence of the employer.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemp, 79 S. E. 558.

§ 265 (Ga.App.) In an adult employe's action for injuries from a defective machine, the burden was on plaintiff to prove that he did not have equal means with the master of discovering the defects, and that by ordinary care he could not have known of them.—Beck v. A. N. Tumlin Co., 79 S. E. 587.

§ 265 (Va.) The happening of an accident is not evidence of negligence by the master; that being an affirmative fact to be established by the injured servant.—Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Goble, 79 S. E. 1038.

§ 267 (N.C.) In an action by a servant for injuries, there was no error in permitting the master to state when he first received notice of the servant's claim, as the time elapsed has a direct bearing on the recollection of the witnesses, and may affect the validity of the claim.—Bird v. Bell Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 448.

§ 270 (Ga.) In an action for the death of a railroad employe from the derailment of a hand car, testimony to show structural defects in the car and track was admissible, though the witnesses did not see the car or track until 30 days or more after the accident.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Anchors, 79 S. E. 158.

§ 270 (S.C.) In an action for the wrongful death of a locomotive fireman, killed when his engine was derailed at a burning trestle, where it appeared that immediately after another engine had passed over the trestle it was discovered to be on fire, testimony of a witness that he saw places nearby where fire had been dropped is admissible as tending to show the origin of the fire.—Bennett v. Southern Ry.-Carolina Division, 79 S. E. 710.

§ 270 (W.Va.) Evidence of a physician's general reputation for drunkenness in the community is admissible as tending to prove that the master knew, or by due diligence should have known, of it.—Guy v. Lanark Fuel Co., 79 S. E. 941.

§ 274 (S.C.) In an action for the death of a locomotive fireman, who was killed when the engine was derailed at a burning trestle, evidence of the engineer's reputation for carefulness is inadmissible.—Bennett v. Southern Ry.-Carolina Division, 79 S. E. 710.

§ 276 (Va.) Evidence, in an action by an employe for injuries sustained while engaged in making a tramway by being struck by a stump which was blown out, held to show that the occurrence was an unavoidable accident.—Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Goble, 79 S. E. 1036.

§ 278 (Ga.) In an action by a section foreman under the federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries resulting from negligence in the operation of a freight train, evidence held insufficient to establish negligence on the part of defendant.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemp, 79 S. E. 558.

§ 278 (Va.) The evidence must show more than a mere probability of negligence by a master.—Yellow Poplar Lumber Co. v. Goble, 79 S. E. 1036.

Evidence, in an action by an employe for injuries sustained while engaged in making a tramway by being struck by a stump which was blown out, held to show that defendant could not reasonably have anticipated or provided against the occurrence.—Id.

§ 285 (Ga.App.) In an action for injuries to a blacksmith's helper, evidence held sufficient to take to the jury the questions whether the piece of iron that struck plaintiff's eye came from the hammer, or from the anvil, or the iron upon which he was working, and also whether the accident was caused by a defect in the hammer, or by the negligence of the blacksmith, who was a fellow servant.—Harvey v. Rome Scale & Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 487.

§ 285 (N.C.) Evidence held to make question for jury as to whether the employer's failure to instruct a servant was the cause of the injury.—Breeden v. Minneola Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 960.

§ 286 (N.C.) Where there was evidence of employer's negligence as cause of employe's injuries, question held to be one for the jury, though it might well have adopted defendant's view that the injury was caused by plaintiff's disobedience of orders.—Breeden v. Minneola Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 960.

Evidence held to make questions for jury as to whether employe was directed to clean machine while in motion, and whether he was furnished a safe appliance.—Id.

§ 286 (Va.) Defendant's negligence in exposing deceased to risks different from those incident to his employment and for which he was unfitted because of his lack of experience held for the jury.—Powhatan Lime Co. v. Affleck's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1054.

§ 289 (Ga.App.) In a fireman's action for injuries received in jumping from his engine in an emergency, the question whether the circumstances justified plaintiff in jumping for his own safety was for the jury.—Charleston & W. O. R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 932.

§ 289 (Va.) Where it appeared that the east side of a track where a servant was killed was a dangerous place in which to put an inexperienced minor to work, that the west side was reasonably safe, and that he had been warned not to work on the east side, the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury.—Powhatan Lime Co. v. Affleck's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1054.

§ 291 (Ga.) In an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries to an employe it is error to give in charge to the jury the provisions of the state statute, raising a presumption against defendant upon proof of injuries by the running of its locomotives or cars.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kemp, 79 S. E. 558.

§ 297 (N.C.) Where the question of whether the master had given orders which caused the accident was submitted to the jury, a finding that the master was not negligent must necessarily have determined that no order was given, and the servant cannot recover.—Bird v. Bell Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 448.

IV. LIABILITIES FOR INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS.

(A) Acts or Omissions of Servant.

§ 302 (W.Va.) A garage keeper cannot leave the garage solely in the hands of a servant, and claim that the latter's negligence in releasing a car to one without authority from the owner is beyond the scope of his employment.—McLain v. West Virginia Automobile Co., 79 S. E. 731.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

See Damages, §§ 97, 100.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

See Appeal and Error, § 1066; Statutes, § 48.

II. RIGHT TO LIEN.

(C) Agreement or Consent of Owner.

§ 71 (W.Va.) Where a husband contracts in his own name with his wife's knowledge for a building on her land, she will be presumed to have constituted him her agent, and her property is liable to a mechanic's lien.—Milligan v. Alexander, 79 S. E. 665.

(E) Subcontractors and Contractors' Workmen and Materialmen.

§ 100 (W.Va.) Under Code 1906, c. 75, § 5, the owner may, by recording the principal contract, limit his liabilities under the contract to the amount of the contract price, and such amount may include any payment under the contract, made when no incipient or perfected right to a lien existed for materials furnished before the payment.—Collins v. Board of Trustees of Davis and Elkins College, 79 S. E. 10.

When a building contract is recorded, one furnishing labor or material to the principal contractor or his subcontractor must take notice of the times of payment and the amount of the contract price, and payments made under the contract before the furnishing of labor or material must be deducted in determining the amount of the contract price available for purposes of lien.—Id.

§ 105 (W.Va.) A subcontractor, in the sense of one to whom a specific portion of the work is sublet by the principal contractor, is entitled to a lien under Code 1906, c. 75, § 3, providing that every materialman, laborer, mechanic, or other person performing labor or furnishing material under a contract with the principal contractor or his subcontractor shall have a lien.—Collins v. Board of Trustees of Davis and Elkins College, 79 S. E. 10.

§ 113 (W.Va.) The mechanic's lien law (Code 1906, c. 75) gives a direct lien to subcontractors and materialmen, and no notice to the owner in advance of the performance of labor or furnishing of material is necessary in order to prevent payment by the owner to the principal contractor.—Collins v. Board of Trustees of Davis and Elkins College, 79 S. E. 10.

§ 115 (W.Va.) Under the mechanic's lien law, payment by the owner to the principal contractor is no defense against a lien for labor or material furnished prior to the payment.—Collins v. Board of Trustees of Davis and Elkins College, 79 S. E. 10.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT.

§ 118 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, §§ 2019, 2020, and 2021, where neither a contractor nor materialmen gave any notice to the owner of the materialmen's claims until after the last payment by the owner to the contractor, such claims were not a lien on the property.—Orinoco Supply Co. v. Masonic & Eastern Star Home, 79 S. E. 964.

§ 132 (N.C.) Revisal 1905, § 2028, as amended by Pub. Laws 1909, c. 32, requires the filing of notice of lien within 6 months to protect the materialman against a purchaser for value without notice, though he may file it within 12 months as against purchasers with notice.—Raeferd Lumber Co. v. Rockfish Trading Co., 79 S. E. 627.

IV. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(B) Property, Estates, and Rights Affected.

§ 183 (Ga.App.) Where materials are furnished for the improvement of two pieces of real estate under a single contract with the owner, and a lien therefor is filed in compliance with Civ. Code 1910, §§ 3352, 3353, the lien attaches to both pieces of property, and it is immaterial for which piece the last item of material was furnished.—Lyon v. Cedartown Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 236.

§ 191 (Ga.) The words "true owner," as used in Civ. Code 1910, § 3352, providing for liens of materialmen, include the owner of a leasehold estate; and hence the liens therein provided for may attach to the interest of a lessee, who has an estate for years, subject to the conditions of the lease.—James G. Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Chamberlin-Johnson-Du Bose Co., 79 S. E. 405.

Where in 1910 a private corporation leased certain lots for 21 years, with the right to sublet, agreeing to pay a certain annual rental, make certain building improvements, keep the buildings insured, and to return the premises in good condition at the expiration of the lease, held, that the lessee had an estate for years, to which a materialman's lien could attach, subject to the conditions of the lease.—Id.

VI. WAIVER, DISCHARGE, RELEASE, AND SATISFACTION.

(A) Waiver of Right to Lien.

§ 210 (N.C.) Extending the time of payment to the owner does not waive a mechanic's lien, unless the time is extended by agreement beyond that allowed for enforcing the lien.—Raeferd Lumber Co. v. Rockfish Trading Co., 79 S. E. 627.

VII. ENFORCEMENT.

§ 253 (Ga.) Want of title in defendant to premises on which a materialman's lien is claimed, and alleged title in a third person not a party to the suit, constitute no bar to an action to foreclose the lien.—James G. Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Chamberlin-Johnson-Du Bose Co., 79 S. E. 465.

§ 279 (N.C.) One claiming to have purchased land charged with a mechanic's lien without notice thereof, has the burden of proof that he is within the proviso of Revisal 1905, § 2028, as amended by Pub. Laws 1909, c. 32, requiring notice of lien to be filed within 12 months after furnishing the materials, provided that as to the rights of a purchaser without notice the notice of lien must be filed within 6 months.—Raeferd Lumber Co. v. Rockfish Trading Co., 79 S. E. 627.

§ 281 (W.Va.) Proof that a wife was frequently present with her husband while a building was being erected on her land under a contract with him, and made suggestions as to the building, is sufficient evidence of consent to its erection.—Milligan v. Alexander, 79 S. E. 665.

II. TITLE, CONVEYANCES, AND CONTRACTS.*(A) Rights and Remedies of Owners.

§ 49 (Va.) Where defendants and their grantors, since 1880, had held possession under a deed purporting to convey the entire fee with covenants of general warranty, which deed constituted color of title, they acquired title to the surveys and to the underlying minerals by adverse possession as against claimants under a prior deed of an undivided mineral interest in the land from the common grantor.—Virginia Coal & Iron Co. v. Hylton, 79 S. E. 337.

(B) Conveyances in General.

§ 55 (N.C.) A conveyance of all the marl and other fossil deposits under the grantor's land held a conveyance of the same in fee and not a mere license, revocable at the pleasure of the grantor or expiring at the grantee's death.—Outlaw v. Gray, 79 S. E. 676.

The minerals beneath the surface of land may be conveyed in fee separate from the surface of the land.—Id.

§ 55 (Va.) The general owner or owners of land may grant all the minerals in the land or any particular species of them and retain ownership of the surface, or vice versa.—Virginia Coal & Iron Co. v. Hylton, 79 S. E. 337.

§ 55 (W.Va.) Where there is a substantial quantity of coal in the land, the grantee of coal in place cannot rescind the sale merely because the coal area is not as large as anticipated.—Light v. E. M. Grant & Co., 79 S. E. 1011.

The grantee of coal in place cannot rescind because of nonexistence of a particular coal vein or measure in the land.—Id.

In case of a deficiency in the quantity of coal or land sold by the acre, the grantee may have an abatement from the unpaid price or a recovery of purchase money paid.—Id.

A deed to coal in place conveying a certain number of acres of coal in consideration of a sum of money which is an exact multiple of the number of acres specified is ambiguous on its face as to whether it is a sale by the acre or a sale in gross.—Id.

A deed to coal in place construed in the light of the circumstances of its execution, and the subsequent conduct of the parties held to be a contract of sale of coal by the acre.—Id.

(C) Leases, Licenses, and Contracts.

§ 62 (Va.) Where certain land was leased for the purpose of mining coal and manufacturing coke thereon, the lessee could construct certain buildings for the future use of its employees and lease those buildings to another company pending such future use without accounting to the lessor for the rent.—Stonegap Colliery Co. v. Kelly & Vicars, 79 S. E. 341.

Where a lease of premises limits the use to coal mining, the right to use the premises in all ways which are customary in carrying on those operations is necessarily incidental to the lease.—Id.

Where a company leasing premises for coal mining purposes required the lessors to purchase and include in the lease adjacent tracts upon which there was neither coal nor timber, that fact is an indication that it was not the intention of the parties to limit the use of the leased premises to strictly mining operations.—Id.

§ 70 (W.Va.) Under a mining lease, which specifically described the property leased and reserved to the owner of an interest, a 5 per cent. interest in the "property or lease herein demised, contracted, and described," which interest should be held in paid-up and nonassessable stock in the lessee's company, evidenced by 5 per cent. of every issue of capital stock, such owner was entitled to 5 per cent. only of the stock issued under authority vested in the company at the time of contract, and not to any part of stock issued under authority subsequently acquired, after the company had acquired valuable mining property other than that covered by the lease.—Taylor v. Buffalo Collieries Co., 79 S. E. 27.

§ 77 (W.Va.) An oil and gas lease binding the lessee to drill within a certain period or make periodical payments of rent, containing no clause of forfeiture, can be terminated only by surrender, abandonment, or expiration of the term.—Reserve Gas Co. v. Carbon Black Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 1002.

§ 81 (W.Va.) Where an oil and gas lease guarantees to the lessor the payment of rental and a supply of gas, he is entitled, both at common law and under the express provisions of Code 1906, c. 62d, to recover for injury to the well from the percolating of water into the gas-bearing sand from an abandoned well, which the defendant owner has failed to plug as required by such statute.—Atkinson v. Virginia Oil & Gas Co., 79 S. E. 647.

Where an oil and gas well is damaged from percolating water due to the failure of the owner of an abandoned well on adjacent land to plug same, the owner of the injured well may recover damages therefor, though he has leased the well and received no rental therefor.—Id.

III. OPERATION OF MINES, QUARRIES, AND WELLS.*(A) Statutory Regulation.

§ 94 (W.Va.) The declaration in an action for the penalty provided by Code 1906, c. 79, § 7, for the unlawful mining and removing of coal within five feet of complainant's property line need not be in the exact words of the statute but is sufficient where it avers the wrong in language legally the equivalent of the terms of the statute.—Selvey v. Grafton Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 656.

Under Code, c. 13, § 17, cl. 15, providing that the word "land" includes hereditaments and rights thereto and interests therein, except chattel interests, in an action for the penalty provided by Code 1906, c. 79, § 7, for unlawful mining, evidence that plaintiff owns coal under the land is not at material variance with an averment that he owns the "land."—Id.

In an action for the penalty provided by Code 1906, c. 79, § 7, for the unlawful mining and removing of coal, it is not necessary to prove damages or special injury; the amount of recovery being prescribed by the statute.—Id.

Declaration, in an action for the penalty provided by Code 1906, c. 79, § 7, for unlawful mining, held not defective for failure to allege the manner in which the coal was unlawfully removed.—Id.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(B) Parties and Debts or Liabilities Secured.

§ 114 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3257, requiring a mortgage to specify the debt secured, a mortgage reciting that it was given for a note and "such future advances" as may be made during a given year is valid only as security for the note.—Benton-Shingler Co. v. Mills, 79 S. E. 755.

(D) Lien and Priority.

§ 183 (Ga.) A mortgagee, who accepts a mortgage note which expressly states that the mortgage is a second mortgage, is estopped to deny the validity of the first mortgage.—Setze v. First Nat. Bank of Pensacola, Fla., 79 S. E. 540.

V. ASSIGNMENT OF MORTGAGE OR DEBT.

§ 235 (Ga.) Under the remedial act (Acts 1899, p. 90; Civ. Code 1910, §§ 3345-3347) relative to the transfer of mortgage notes and liens, construed in connection with Civ. Code 1910, §§ 4273, 4276, 3345, relative to transfer of notes and mortgages, the simple indorsement of the name of the payee in a mortgage note payable to order, on the back thereof, transferred the note and lien.—Setze v. First Nat. Bank of Pensacola, Fla., 79 S. E. 540.

IX. FORECLOSURE BY EXERCISE OF POWER OF SALE.

§ 338 (N.C.) Where, in an action for an accounting to ascertain the amount due under a deed of trust, plaintiff admitted there was due $436, the court could require the payment by plaintiff of the amount so admitted as a condition of enjoining a sale under the deed of trust.—Bonner v. Rodman, 79 S. E. 271.

X. FORECLOSURE BY ACTION.

(B) Right to Foreclose and Defenses.

§ 412 (Ga.) There can be but one foreclosure of a mortgage.—Strickland v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 539.

§ 417 (Ga.) Where the administrator of a mortgagee's estate fully administered the same, and delivered the mortgage to plaintiff as part of his interest therein, and the only other person having an interest in the mortgage relinquished to him, held, that plaintiff had a perfect equitable title to the mortgage, entitling him to enforce the same, though the administrator had not assigned it to him in writing.—Moughon v. Masterson, 79 S. E. 561.

(E) Parties and Process.

§ 427 (Ga.) There could ordinarily be no foreclosure of a common-law mortgage conveying title as security, unless all the parties entitled to the mortgage money were before the court.—Strickland v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 539.

§ 427 (Ga.) The petition in an action to foreclose a mortgage held not demurrable on the grounds that it was not brought by an administrator of the mortgagee, that a personal representative of the deceased sister of plaintiff was a necessary party, or that her husband should have been joined as a party plaintiff.—Moughon v. Masterson, 79 S. E. 561.

(F) Pleading and Evidence.

§ 458 (Ga.) In a mortgage foreclosure proceeding, special demurrers based on the ground that no copy of the mortgage or the record in a former litigation was attached to the petition held sufficiently met by amendment.—Moughon v. Masterson, 79 S. E. 561.

§ 458 (Ga.App.) An affidavit of illegality, filed by defendant in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding, is amendable as are ordinary pleas.—Benton-Shingler Co. v. Mills, 79 S. E. 755.

(G) Injunction and Receiver.

§ 468 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5477, a receiver will not ordinarily be appointed for mortgaged property where the security is not inadequate or the mortgagor insolvent.—Planters' Oil Mill v. Carter, 79 S. E. 1120.

That a mortgagor failed to keep the property insured as required by the mortgage held not ground for the appointment of a receiver, where the mortgage provided that the mortgagee could have the property insured and include the premiums in the mortgage debt.—Id.

Conditional granting of application for an injunction and a receiver in foreclosure held error, where the value of the mortgaged property was largely in excess of the mortgage debt, including taxes and insurance.—Id.

MOTIONS.

See Continuance; Execution, §§ 167-177, 433; New Trial, §§ 114-163; Pleading, §§ 343, 360.

MOTIVE.

See Habeas Corpus, § 92; Homicide, § 144.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

See Action, § 50; Equity, §§ 148, 226; Pleading, § 64.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

See Adverse Possession, § 10; Appeal and Error, § 170; Arrest, § 63; Counties; Criminal Law, §§ 88, 393; Damages, § 216; Drains, § 13; Eminent Domain, §§ 2, 69, 101, 136, 167, 208, 238; Execution, § 167; Health, § 16; Injunction, §§ 77, 85; Mandamus, § 73; Nuisance, § 6; Railroads, §§ 94, 95; Schools and

School Districts; Street Railroads; Telegraphs and Telephones, § 33; Theaters and Shows, § 1; Waters and Water Courses, § 190.

II. GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS IN GENERAL.

§ 57 (N.C.) Cities and towns have only such powers and capacities as have been conferred upon them by law.—Board of Com'rs of Vance County v. Town of Henderson, 79 S. E. 442.

§ 83 (Ga.App.) A city official's exercise of the discretion conferred upon him by a city to grant or refuse an application of a citizen to keep cattle within the corporate limits will not be interfered with by the courts unless arbitrarily abused.—Thorpe v. City of Savannah, 79 S. E. 949.

IV. PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL OR OTHER GOVERNING BODY.

(B) Ordinances and By-Laws in General.

§ 120 (S.C.) In construing a municipal ordinance the court must bear in mind the law and policy of the state upon the same subject and if possible construe them so that there will be no conflict.—City of Anderson v. Fant, 79 S. E. 641.

V. OFFICERS, AGENTS, AND EMPLOYEES.

(A) Municipal Officers in General.

§ 142 (Ga.App.) The solicitor of the city court of the city of Jefferson, and the clerk of the superior court were not disqualified, under Civ. Code 1910, § 258, prohibiting the holding of two civil offices under the state government, to serve as members of the city council.—Phillips v. City of Jefferson, 79 S. E. 222.

Municipal officers are not "civil officers" of the state within Civ. Code 1910, § 258, disqualifying persons holding any office of profit or trust under the government of the state from holding any other civil office therein.—Id.

(B) Municipal Departments and Officers Thereof.

§ 184 (Ga.App.) Act Aug. 11, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 909), did not revive Act 1888 (Acts 1888, p. 443) § 77, making the term of a policeman two years, unless removed for cause, and creating a new charter for the city of Rome; the broad provisions of the amendatory act being inconsistent with the limitation of power prescribed in Acts 1888, p. 443, § 77.—Lumpkin v. City of Rome, 79 S. E. 158.

§ 185 (Ga.App.) Under Act Aug. 11, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 909) § 11, the mayor and council have power to appoint policemen and fix their salaries and terms of office, and to remove any policeman at pleasure, and can remove a policeman appointed by the board of police commissioners for a fixed term, under authority of Act Aug. 20, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 1014).—Lumpkin v. City of Rome, 79 S. E. 158.

VI. PROPERTY.

§ 225 (N.C.) Where a municipal corporation built a market house, and placed narrow raised runways in front of the doors of the various market stalls, against which runways the carts were backed up, the runways were not public walks, but were subject to sale by the city.—City of Raleigh v. Durfey, 79 S. E. 434.

Objecting owners acquired no property in the walks, such walks not being sidewalks, although occasionally used by pedestrians for passing and repassing.—Id.

The Legislature may authorize a municipality to convey the sidewalks around a plot of land owned by the city, though such sidewalks have become public ways by prescription.—Id.

Owners of land across the street from a rectangular block, which had been used for a market house, have no pecuniary interest in sidewalks around such market house which will prevent a conveyance of the market-house site, including the walks, which the municipality is authorized to convey.—Id.

IX. PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

(A) Power to Make Improvements or Grant Aid Therefor.

§ 269 (Ga.) Under Code of City of Atlanta of 1910, p. 359, § 340, the city is authorized to repave sidewalks when they become so worn and defective as to be no longer useful.—Wallace v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 554.

§ 271 (Ga.) Where a municipal charter conferred power to preserve the health, and good order of the community, make contracts, acquire and hold real property, etc., it authorized the city to establish and construct a waterworks system.—Hall v. City of Calhoun, 79 S. E. 533.

§ 277 (Ga.) Where a city had charter power to establish a waterworks system, and it was necessary to go beyond its corporate limits to obtain a supply, a contract to use a spring of a private property owner outside the city limits was not ultra vires.—Hall v. City of Calhoun, 79 S. E. 533.

(B) Preliminary Proceedings and Ordinances or Resolutions.

§ 292 (Ga.) The written petition provided for by Code of City of Atlanta, § 346, par. 3, and required to have the approval of the chief of construction, is not a prerequisite to the exercise of power by the city to order a repavement of a sidewalk.—Wallace v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 554.

§ 294 (Ga.) Code of City of Atlanta of 1910, § 347, requiring the publication of notice, applies only where a street is to be paved, and not to proceedings for the repavement of a sidewalk.—Wallace v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 554.

(C) Contracts.

§ 376 (Ga.App.) That a municipality fails to take a bond from a contractor providing for his payment for materials furnished, as required by the act approved August 12, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 86), will not render it liable for material furnished to the contractor to be used in construction of a public building.—Woodward Lumber Co. v. Town of Grantville, 79 S. E. 221.

(F) Enforcement of Assessments and Special Taxes.

§ 544 (Ga.) Where an affidavit of illegality alleged that the amount was excessive, in that certain illegal sums had been included, it necessarily admitted that some part of the amount claimed under Acts 1911, p. 1097 et seq. was due, and it was insufficient, in the absence of an allegation that the correct amounts had been paid to the levying officer.—Hardwick v. City of Dalton, 79 S. E. 553.

An allegation in an affidavit of illegality to prevent the enforcement of a street improvement assessment that part of the work was unnecessary held insufficient, in the absence of a further allegation that the order was an abuse of the discretion of the municipal authorities.—Id.

X. POLICE POWER AND REGULATIONS.

(A) Delegation, Extent, and Exercise of Power.

§ 591 (Ga.App.) In the exercise of its police power a city may grant to a city officer the discretion to permit or refuse an application of a citizen to keep cattle within the corporate limits.—Thorpe v. City of Savannah, 79 S. E. 949.

§ 592 (Ga.App.) A municipal ordinance which attempts to punish for an act penalized by a law of the state is void.—Alexander v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 177.

§ 604 (Ga.App.) An ordinance prescribing the terms upon which citizens of the municipality shall be permitted to keep cattle in a city, is a lawful exercise of the city's police power.—Thorpe v. City of Savannah, 79 S. E. 849.

§ 623 (W.Va.) Under a provision of the charter of the city of Fairmont, same as Code 1906, c. 47, § 28, authorizing the council to abate a nuisance, it may abate only that as a nuisance which is recognized as such per se, or branded as such by statute or ordinance.—Parker v. City of Fairmont, 79 S. E. 660.

The city of Fairmont had no power under a provision of its charter, the same as Code 1906, c. 47, § 28, authorizing it to abate a nuisance, to abate the production and emission of smoke from the plant of a lawful business, where there was no valid ordinance making such production and emission unlawful.—Id.

§ 623 (W.Va.) Under a city charter giving the council power to abate by summary proceedings whatever in the opinion of the council is a nuisance, the council may abate only that as a nuisance which is recognized as such per se or branded as such by lawful statute or ordinance.—Donohoe v. Fredlock, 79 S. E. 736.

(B) Violations and Enforcement of Regulations.

§ 640 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for illegally keeping intoxicating liquors for sale, the mayor may credit one witness, in preference to several who contradict such witness, regardless of any efforts to impeach him.—Jones v. City of Carrollton, 79 S. E. 583.

§ 642 (Ga.App.) A reviewing court will not pass upon the credibility of witnesses in a prosecution for illegally keeping intoxicating liquors for sale.—Jones v. City of Carrollton, 79 S. E. 583.

§ 642 (Ga.App.) Certiorari lies to review in the superior court the judgment of any municipal or mayor's court.—Douthit v. City of Blue Ridge, 79 S. E. 744.

Where, on certiorari to the municipal court, the answer of the magistrate shows that accused had not violated a city ordinance as alleged, conviction was unauthorized, and certiorari should have been sustained.—Id.

§ 642 (Ga.App.) Where a petition for certiorari did not have attached thereto either a certified copy of the bond required by Civ. Code 1910, § 5192, or a certificate that such bond had been filed, and it appeared from the petition that the bond was not conditioned as required by law, certiorari on behalf of one convicted in the recorder's court was properly denied.—Carolis v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 752.

XI. USE AND REGULATION OF PUBLIC PLACES, PROPERTY, AND WORKS.

(A) Streets and Other Public Ways.

§ 655 (Ga.App.) A city charter, authorizing the city "to open, lay out, to widen, straighten, or otherwise change streets," authorizes the straightening of a street where the termini remain the same, and the distance between them is shortened.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

§ 661 (N.C.) Though the mile square upon which the city of Raleigh was originally located was purchased by the state, and lots within that district were sold with the reservation to the state of the title to the streets, the control of the city over such streets is the same as in other cities, except perhaps in exceptional cases.—Moore v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 79 S. E. 596.

§ 663 (Ga.App.) Where a public street has been abandoned, the fee in the soil reverts to the owners of the abutting lots.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

§ 663 (N.C.) The owner of property abutting on a street in a city has an easement or property in the shade trees standing along the sidewalk in the street, subject to the right of the city government over the same, and one which the law will protect.—Moore v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 79 S. E. 596.

Where an electric light company authorized to place poles and wires along a city street invades the rights of an abutting owner in the trees on the street in front of his property, and there is wantonness, oppression, or bad motive, the abutting owner may be awarded punitive damages.—Id.

Where an abutting owner is damaged by an electric light company cutting off limbs of the trees standing in a city street in front of his property, he is entitled to damages for the deterioration, if any, in the value of his property, though the trimming was done in a skillful manner, as cutting the limbs in a negligent manner would simply have added to the damages.—Id.

§ 667 (W.Va.) A private awning erected over a public street without lawful authority is a public nuisance though it does not materially interfere with public travel.—Davis v. Spragg, 79 S. E. 652.

§ 669 (W.Va.) An abutting owner has a special right of access to a highway and to light, air, and view therefrom regardless of the ownership of the fee in the highway.—Davis v. Spragg, 79 S. E. 652.

§ 678 (N.C.) The city of Raleigh, for the purpose of its government and management, may in its discretion cut down or trim up trees bordering the streets in the district wherein title to the trees is in the state, and cannot be restrained, except in case of willfulness or oppression.—Moore v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 79 S. E. 596.

§§ 680, 681 (N.C.) A city cannot transfer its right of control over shade trees standing along the edge of its streets to an individual or to quasi public corporation such as an electric light company, which is authorized to use the streets.—Moore v. Carolina Power & Light Co., 79 S. E. 596.

§§ 680, 681 (W.Va.) Where the council of a city attempts to permit the permanent occupation of its public streets for private purposes without authority from its charter to so do, it acts ultra vires.—Davis v. Spragg, 79 S. E. 652.

§ 697 (Ga.App.) A party suing as executor was not estopped to have obstructions upon certain streets removed by the fact that his testator had closed a part of a street not involved in the suit.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

§ 697 (W.Va.) Evidence, in an action by property owners to enjoin as a nuisance the maintenance of a private awning erected over a public street, held insufficient to show that the obstruction of the view from the street to the front of their buildings seriously and injuriously affected the actual or rental value.—Davis v. Spragg, 79 S. E. 652.

XII. TORTS.

(A) Exercise of Governmental and Corporate Powers in General.

§ 723 (S.C.) An action for tort will not lie against a municipal corporation unless it is made liable by statute.—Parrish v. Town of Yorkville, 79 S. E. 635.

(C) Defects or Obstructions in Streets and Other Public Ways.

§ 759 (Ga.App.) Where the city of Macon for nine years exercised full jurisdiction of and authority over territory added to it, including the defective street causing plaintiff's injury, and thus accepted the street as previously laid out and named, it was liable, though it had not formally complied with Acts 1903, p. 579, providing that such city should not be liable for failure to keep in repair any streets not selected, laid out, and named by it.—City of Macon v. Leonard, 79 S. E. 241.

§ 763 (N.C.) A town operating an electric light plant is not required to use the "latest improved method" of suspending arc lights to avoid injuring persons coming in contact with its wires, without regard to whether such methods are in general use.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

§ 790 (N.C.) Evidence that the witness told a day laborer employed by a town to trim street lights and do other work that the witness had received a shock at an electric street light, near which plaintiff's intestate was subsequently found dead, was inadmissible, as notice to a day laborer is not notice to the town.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

§ 818 (N.C.) Evidence that four days before plaintiff's intestate was found dead 35 feet from an electric street light, lying on the ground, the witness had reached up high to take hold of the light and received a shock was inadmissible where notice was not given the town and there was no evidence that the light was any lower the night deceased met his death.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

Testimony was admissible that the witness saw deceased, alleged to have been killed by a shock from an electric light wire, before he was moved and there were no wires about his feet, that the light and pole near where deceased was found were all right two or three days before, that the transformer was all right the next day, and that the primary wire was not touching the secondary wires next day.—Id.

Evidence as to whether the voltage on an electric light wire, by which deceased was alleged to have been killed, would not have been greater than 110 volts if the insulation on the primary wire had been defective was inadmissible, where there was no evidence that the insulation was defective.—Id.

§ 819 (N.C.) Plaintiff was required to show by the greater weight of evidence that the defendant failed to exercise proper care in the performance of its legal duties to plaintiff's intestate, whose death was alleged to have been due to a shock from an electric light wire, and that such negligent breach of duty was the proximate cause.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

§ 822 (N.C.) There was no error in instructing that defendant contended that plaintiff's intestate himself lowered the electric street light and wires near which he was found lying dead, and that if the intestate did, by meddling with the chain, lower the light and received a fatal shock from the wires, plaintiff could not recover.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

(D) Defects or Obstructions in Sewers, Drains, and Water Courses.

§ 839 (Ga.App.) Where the overflows into plaintiff's store after a change of street grade were of such a character as to raise the inference that the city knew of the defects in the sewer causing it, the city was liable.—City of Americus v. Phillips, 79 S. E. 36.

§ 845 (Ga.App.) Where the petition alleged that a city, in raising the grade of a street, had refused to provide sufficient means to convey water flowing through a depression in the land, and by reason thereof the water flowed into plaintiff's store, any testimony to show the store subject to overflows of rainwater thereby was admissible.—City of Americus v. Phillips, 79 S. E. 36.

Where plaintiff alleged that the city's failure to provide for carrying away rainwater on a change of grade, which caused it to flow into plaintiff's store, and defendant did not demur thereto, plaintiff could show that the water entered either in front, or in the rear, or upon the side, or from all directions.—Id.

Where petition alleged that failure of a city to provide for the conveyance of water which flowed into defendant's store on a change of grade, evidence that water overflowing from an inadequate manhole spread over the street and sidewalk into plaintiff's store was admissible.—Id.

(E) Condition or Use of Public Buildings and Other Property.

§ 852 (N.C.) A town operating an electric light plant must use that degree of care that a reasonably prudent man would use under like circumstances to avoid injuring persons coming in contact with electrically charged wires, and it is charged with a continuous duty of taking reasonable precaution to keep its appliances in proper condition.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

XIII. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, SECURITIES, AND TAXATION.

(C) Bonds and Other Securities, and Sinking Funds.

§ 917 (Ga.) Where no bill of exceptions has been filed within 20 days to a judgment confirming the issuance of municipal bonds under Civ. Code 1910, §§ 445, 447, such judgment becomes conclusive under section 448, and the issuance of such bonds cannot be subsequently enjoined, at the suit of taxpayers, on the ground that the town has no authority to establish waterworks and electric lights from the proceeds of the bonds.—Edwards v. Town of Guyton, 79 S. E. 195.

L. ACTS OR OMISSIONS CONSTITUTING NEGLIGENCE.

(A) Personal Conduct in General.

§ 1 (Va.) No cause of action arises from an injury caused by the doing of a dangerous but lawful act in a lawful manner; but in such cases the doctrine of assumption of risk applies.—Steele's Adm'r v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 346.

(C) Condition and Use of Land, Buildings, and other Structures.

§ 32 (Va.) Where an engineer, after housing his engine in a roundhouse at the end of his run, started to leave the premises along a usually traveled path, when he fell into a ditch dug by defendant under a contract to rebuild the roundhouse, and was injured, a recovery could not be defeated on the ground that he was traveling the path for his own purpose.—Nesbit v. Webb, 79 S. E. 330.

§ 32 (Va.) A licensee takes upon himself all the ordinary risks of the place and business, and the owner owes him no active duty of protection until he knows of his danger, or might have known of it and avoided it by the use of ordinary care.—Kiser v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 348.

§ 33 (Va.) An owner of premises owes to a trespasser the duty only of doing him no intentional or willful injury, and before any duty of protection arises there must be such notice of his danger as would put a prudent man on the alert.—Kiser v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 348.

III. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.*(A) Persons Injured in General.

§ 65 (Va.) The doctrine of contributory negligence implies the existence of negligence.—Powhatan Lime Co. v. Affleck's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1054.

(B) Children and Others Under Disability.

§ 85 (Ga.) The diligence required of a child of tender years is not measured by the ordinary care required of an adult; but "due care" in such child is such care as the child's mental and physical capacity fits it for exercising under the particular circumstances.—Elk Cotton Mills v. Grant, 79 S. E. 836.

(D) Comparative Negligence.

§ 98 (Va.) Where it appears that the negligence of a servant has contributed as an efficient cause to the injury, the court will not undertake to balance the negligence of the respective parties.—Powhatan Lime Co. v. Affleck's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1054.

§ 101 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 2781, providing that no person shall recover against a railroad company for injuries from his own negligence, and that where both are at fault the damages shall be diminished, a person injured from a crossing accident cannot recover, where his negligence is equal to or greater than that of the railroad company.—Georgia & F. Ry. v. Newton, 79 S. E. 142.

§ 101 (Ga.) Where an injured employé was not guilty of negligence preventing a recovery, but was guilty of some negligence, the doctrine of diminution of damages may be invoked.—Elk Cotton Mills v. Grant, 79 S. E. 836.

The words "contributory negligence," while generally employed to express negligence which will preclude a recovery, in this state are commonly used to express negligence which will merely diminish a recovery, under the doctrine of comparative negligence.—Id.

§ 101 (Ga.App.) A railroad company is not liable for injuries caused by the running of its trains, if it can show that plaintiff was equally at fault.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 101 (Ga.App.) In a railroad employé's action under the federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries, plaintiff need not show that he was free from fault; his own fault, if any, going merely in reduction of damages.—Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 932.

IV. ACTIONS.*(B) Evidence.

§ 121 (Va.) Negligence will not be presumed in an action to recover damages for personal injuries; but the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove it by a preponderance of the evidence.—Steele's Adm'r v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 346.

(C) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 136 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff's injuries were the result of pure casualty, a nonsuit was properly granted.—Glanton v. City of Rome, 79 S. E. 225.

§ 136 (Ga.App.) Where there is evidence of mutual negligence on the part of an automobile driver and of the railroad company, the comparison of the negligence is a question for the jury.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 141 (Ga.) An instruction that, if plaintiff by ordinary care could have avoided the consequences to himself of defendant's negligence, there could be no recovery, was in effect the language of Civ. Code 1910, § 4426, and was therefore not objectionable as limiting plaintiff's negligence which would bar recovery to that succeeding the negligence of defendant.—Collum v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 475.

§ 141 (Ga.App.) In an action for injuries received on a railroad track, where there was evidence of negligence of both parties, it was error to refuse a requested charge that, if the negligence of the plaintiff exceeded or equaled that of the defendant, he could not recover.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

See Criminal Law, §§ 942, 945; Homicide, § 319; New Trial, §§ 108, 168.

NEW TRIAL.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 110, 222, 270, 299, 302, 502, 933, 977, 979, 1005, 1178, 1195; Criminal Law, §§ 909-955, 1063, 1105, 1129, 1156; Eminent Domain, § 224; Homicide, § 319.

I. NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

§ 11 (Ga.App.) While a trial judge has less discretion in granting a new trial after a second verdict for the same party, he is not relieved in such case from exercising his discretion.—Savannah Electric Co. v. Lackens, 79 S. E. 53.

II. GROUNDS.*(A) Errors and Irregularities in General.

§ 18 (Ga.) The overruling of a demurrer to a pleading and of objections to an amendment to a plea can only be taken advantage of by exception, and are not ground for new trial.—Hurt v. Barnes, 79 S. E. 775.

§ 27 (Ga.App.) A motion for new trial on general grounds is properly refused, where plaintiff's undisputed testimony requires the judgment rendered in its favor.—Wright v. Bank of Southwestern Georgia, 79 S. E. 184.

(B) Misconduct of Parties, Counsel, or Witnesses.

§ 29 (Ga.App.) Where counsel for plaintiff remarked in the presence of the jury, while claimant was testifying, that if she were let alone she would impeach herself, and counsel for claimant moved for a mistrial, and the court refused either to award a mistrial or to rebuke counsel, it was ground for a new trial.—Smith v. D. Rothschild & Co., 79 S. E. 88.

(C) Rulings and Instructions at Trial.

§ 39 (Ga.App.) Where the answer presented the defense that the note sued on was without consideration and that plaintiff with knowledge of this fact conspired with the payee to collect same from defendant, the maker, an instruction that the only defense raised was one of non est factum held ground for new trial where the error affected the whole trial.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 237.

§ 39 (Ga. App.) In an action by a wife to recover for personal injuries, in which the court instructed the jury as to the measure of damages for diminished capacity to discharge plaintiff's ordinary daily duties, a new trial will be granted, where it is impossible to determine what damages, if any, the jury allowed for diminution of plaintiff's capacity to discharge her household duties; such services belonging to her husband.—Berrien County v. Allen, 79 S. E. 1129.

(D) Disqualification or Misconduct of or Affecting Jury.

§ 55 (S.C.) Misconduct of jury, not such as to be clearly prejudicial and not brought to the attention of the trial judge until after verdict, though known during the trial to defendants counsel, did not require the granting of a new trial.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

(E) Verdict or Findings Contrary to Law or Evidence.

§ 68 (Ga.) In a joint action by two plaintiffs against a railroad company, a verdict for plaintiffs will be set aside, where joint ownership as to much of the property alleged to have been destroyed was not proved.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Henderson, 79 S. E. 556.

§ 68 (Ga.App.) Where plaintiff establishes her case, and there is no evidence whatever to sustain the defense relied upon, a verdict for defendant should be set aside and a new trial granted.—Wardlaw v. Frederick, 79 S. E. 523.

§ 68 (Ga. App.) Where a mortgage fi. fa. did not follow the mortgage, and the levy did not follow the fi. fa., it appearing that the mortgagor had two farms in the militia district in which the mortgaged crops were located, and there was no parol evidence identifying the property described in the levy with that which had been mortgaged, a new trial should have been granted.—Clark v. Georgia Fertilizer Works, 79 S. E. 1134.

§ 69 (Ga.App.) Though the testimony for the losing party would have warranted a different verdict, the court did not err in refusing a new trial; the credibility of witnesses being for the jury.—Brown v. Hawkins, 79 S. E. 70.

§ 70 (Ga.App.) In an action on an insurance policy, where the only issues were the value of the property sold and the amount of the loss, and whether the delay in payment was due to bad faith, and verdict on these issues was supported by the evidence, a motion for new trial was properly overruled.—Providence-Washington Ins. Co. v. Spence, 79 S. E. 77.

§ 70 (W.Va.) A new trial should not be granted for insufficiency of the evidence, though the evidence is contradictory, where it does not appear that the verdict is plainly unwarranted by the evidence, when considered most favorably in its support.—Wilson v. Johnson, 79 S. E. 734.

§ 71 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence, though conflicting, warranted a verdict for the defendant, there was no error in refusing plaintiff's motion for a new trial.—Jarrard v. Hawes, 79 S. E. 373.

§ 79 (Ga.) That a judgment does not follow or is not authorized by the verdict is not a good ground for a motion for new trial.—Potts v. City of Atlanta, 79 S. E. 110.

§ 81 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action on the lien of a sawmill proprietor, it appears that the property was surrendered to the debtor, and the evidence does not show that the lien was recorded, a verdict in favor of the lien should be set aside on motion for a new trial on the ground that the lien was lost, though this point was not raised by motion at the trial.—Richardson v. Mallory, 79 S. E. 362.

(G) Surprise, Accident, Inadvertence, or Mistake.

§ 91 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 513, the verdict of a jury may be set aside for mistake or excusable neglect, if rendered subsequent to the passage of Laws 1893, c. 81.—Mann v. Hall, 79 S. E. 437.

(H) Newly Discovered Evidence.

§ 108 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action for injuries to a railroad employe's wife while riding on a free pass issued under authority of the Hepburn Act, there was proof of an actual marriage of plaintiff and the employe, a new trial was properly denied, where the newly discovered evidence relied on furnished merely proof of a presumptive marriage between one of them and a third person.—Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 79 S. E. 242.

§ 108 (N. C.) A new trial for newly discovered evidence will only be granted on appeal where it is very probable that substantial justice has not been done by reason of the unavoidable failure to produce the evidence at the trial, and where it is also probable that on a new trial a different result will be reached and right prevail.—Warrick v. Taylor, 79 S. E. 286.

§ 108 (S.C.) Where affidavits on an application for a new trial for newly discovered evidence presented an issue of fact, were conflicting, and did not show that such would probably change the result, there was no abuse of discretion in denying the motion.—Miller v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 645.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE NEW TRIAL.

§ 114 (Ga.) A motion for new trial, filed with the judge who heard the case after he had severed his connection with the court and while another judge who received the verdict was presiding, should have been dismissed for want of jurisdiction to entertain same.—Pendergrass v. Duke, 79 S. E. 129.

§ 117 (Ga.App.) A motion for a new trial, which was not filed during the term at which the rule nisi was granted, should be dismissed.—W. H. Cooper & Sons v. Bell, 79 S. E. 390.

§ 124 (Ga.) A motion for a new trial, which complains that the judge instructed on the impeachment of witnesses, but fails to state, at least in substance, the instruction given, presents nothing for determination.—Brock v. Brock, 79 S. E. 478.

§ 124 (Ga.) A motion for a new trial complaining of the admission of certain documents in evidence, without setting out such documents, but referring to them in general terms as "fully set out in the brief of evidence accompanying this motion," held insufficient.—Ford v. Blackshear Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 576.

§ 132 (Ga.) A brief of evidence is an essential part of a valid motion for new trial.—Pendergrass v. Duke, 79 S. E. 129.

§ 132 (Ga.App.) A ground of motion for new trial which complains of the admission of documentary evidence cannot be considered, unless the evidence is set forth or attached thereto as an exhibit.—Franklin v. Fields & Chance, 79 S. E. 366.

§ 153 (S.C.) Affidavits showing misconduct of jurors as a ground for new trial need not be served on opposing counsel four days before hearing.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

§ 154 (Ga.App.) Where a rule nisi was granted on a motion for a new trial, and ordered served, and the motion set for the next regular term, it was proper to dismiss the motion, where the rule nisi had not been served at the calling of the motion.—Tyler & Tomlinson v. Arnett, 79 S. E. 482.

§ 155 (Ga.) While the judge of a superior court may, under Civ. Code 1910, § 4852, determine a motion for new trial in vacation, without an order passed in term time, when upon the application of either party the judge has fixed a time for hearing and 10 days' notice has been given, such power can be exercised only where a valid motion for a new trial is pending.—Pendergrass v. Duke, 79 S. E. 129.

§ 156 (Ga.App.) Where a party moving for a new trial failed to serve the rule nisi as ordered by the court, and showed no reason on the call of the motion why the service had not been made, the court properly refused to grant a continuance to permit a service of the rule.—Tyler & Tomlinson v. Arnett, 79 S. E. 482.

§ 161 (Va.) Where, in ejectment in two counts, one for recovery of 1,000 acres and the other of an included tract of 79 acres, which was the tract actually in dispute, verdict was rendered generally for defendant, held, that the court, instead of granting a new trial, properly required defendant to enter a release of that portion of the 1,000-acre tract outside of the tract in dispute.—Honaker v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 391.

§ 163 (Ga.) The orders made on a motion for a new trial held not to show that the trial judge failed to exercise his discretion in passing on the motion.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Anchors, 79 S. E. 153.

§ 163 (Ga.App.) An order overruling a motion for new trial and reciting that the trial judge did not feel justified in granting a new trial, as two juries had found in favor of the plaintiff, did not show a refusal of the judge to exercise his discretion.—Savannah Electric Co. v. Lackens, 79 S. E. 53.

§ 168 (N.C.) Where defendant moves for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence after the case is argued in the Supreme Court, the application should be carefully scrutinized, and the burden is upon the defendant to rebut the presumption that the verdict is correct and that there has been a lack of diligence.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

Requisites of an affidavit in the Supreme Court for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence stated.—Id.

NOVATION.

§ 1 (Ga.App.) Under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 3543, a change in the terms of a contract is called a "novation."—Little Rock Furniture Co. v. Jones & Co., 79 S. E. 375.

NUISANCE

See Action, § 7; Courts, § 163; Easements, § 61; Injunction, § 77; Municipal Corporations, §§ 623, 667, 697; Waters and Water Courses, § 126.

I. PRIVATE NUISANCES.

(A) Nature of Injury, and Liability Therefor.

§ 3 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4457, a "nuisance" is "anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another."—Williams v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 850.

§ 6 (N.C.) A continued violation of a valid ordinance constitutes a nuisance.—Knight v. Foster, 79 S. E. 614.

§ 10 (Ga.) The action authorized by Civ. Code 1910, § 4458, to be brought against the alienee of the person creating a continuing nuisance, is for damages resulting from its maintenance, and not from its creation.—Williams v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 850.

(B) Acquisition of Rights by Prescription.

§ 11 (Ga.) Prescription cannot run in favor of the maintenance of a railroad embankment constituting a continuing nuisance.—Williams v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 850.

(C) Abatement and Injunction.

§ 18 (Ga.App.) A private nuisance may be abated by the summary proceeding provided for in Civ. Code 1910, § 5329 et seq.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

(D) Actions for Damages.

§ 42 (Ga.) An action for damages for the maintenance of a nuisance, when brought against the alienee of the person creating it to recover pursuant to Civ. Code 1910, § 4458, can be maintained against such person only after he has been notified to abate the nuisance.—Williams v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 850.

§ 54 (Ga.) In an action against the alienee under Civ. Code 1910, § 4458, for damages from a continuing nuisance maintained by the alienee of the person creating the nuisance, it is error to charge the law applicable to an action for damages from the creation of the nuisance.—Williams v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 850.

II. PUBLIC NUISANCES.

(B) Rights and Remedies of Private Persons.

§ 72 (Ga.App.) An individual cannot sue to abate a public nuisance, unless he shows special damage in which the public does not participate.—Adair v. Spellman Seminary, 79 S. E. 589.

§ 72 (W.Va.) An individual may sue to enjoin a public nuisance only when his rights are affected in a special manner different from the public in general.—Davis v. Spragg, 79 S. E. 652.

For a public nuisance to be enjoined at the suit of an individual, plaintiff must not only be specially damaged but his injury must be serious and affect the substance and value of his property.—Id.

§ 75 (W.Va.) That plaintiff maintains a similar nuisance constitutes no defense to a suit to abate a public nuisance.—Davis v. Spragg, 79 S. E. 652.

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE.

§ 3 (Ga.App.) Neither threats alone, unaccompanied by any fear or apparent intention to execute them, nor the doing of an act which impedes or defeats the execution of the process with which the officer is armed, but without resisting him, is sufficient to constitute the offense of forcibly resisting an officer in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 311.—Raines v. State, 79 S. E. 860.

§ 16 (Ga.App.) Evidence in a prosecution for forcibly resisting an officer, in violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 311, held insufficient to sustain a conviction.—Raines v. State, 79 S. E. 860.

PARTITION.

II. ACTIONS FOR PARTITION.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 14 (Ga.) The rule that, in partitioning property among tenants in common, there should be a complete partitioning does not affect the rights of a devisee entitled to possession to have his share delivered to him, though there may be other devisees not then entitled to possession.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 546.

(B) Proceedings and Relief.

§ 44 (Ga.) A suit in partition was not premature as to those plaintiffs who were of age and sui juris, though there were other plaintiffs who were minors and not then entitled to recover.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 546.

§ 46 (Ga.) All the parties in interest should have been made parties to a suit in partition.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 546.

§ 48 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, §§ 76, 410, 414, a party claiming to be a tenant in common of land which plaintiffs desired sold for partition may properly be brought in as a party defendant.—McKeel v. Holloman, 79 S. E. 445.

§ 53 (W.Va.) Where land which is the subject of a suit in partition contains valuable deposits of oil and gas in imminent danger of loss by drainage, and the parties interested are unable to agree upon some plan for development, the court may appoint a receiver to produce the oil and gas as a measure of preservation.—Ohio Fuel Oil Co. v. Burdett, 79 S. E. 667.

§ 55 (Ga.) It is not essential that a petition for partition specify the interest of each legatee having an interest in the land.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 546.

§ 63 (N.C.) Where defendant, who claimed to be the owner of one-third interest in land which plaintiffs desired partitioned, set up his claim in derogation of plaintiffs' title to one-third of the property, he has the burden of proof.—McKeel v. Holloman, 79 S. E. 445.

In partition of land of which defendant claimed to be a tenant in common of one-third, a will under which defendant claimed is properly rejected, where there was no sufficient identification of the land described in the will.—Id.

§ 64 (Ga.) Where the petition in partition was good as against the demurrer filed, it was error to dismiss the entire case, though certain parts of the petition should have been stricken.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 546.

That an allegation of the petition that plaintiffs were tenants in common with executors and entitled to partition on that basis should have been stricken did not require dismissal of the entire cause.—Id.

§ 78 (N.C.) On a partition of land, the party making betterments is entitled to have the part improved by him allotted in his share, in which case he recovers nothing for the betterments.—Daniel v. Dixon, 79 S. E. 425.

§ 83 (W. Va.) In partition, the court may determine title between conflicting claimants of an undivided interest in the land.—Wright v. Pittman, 79 S. E. 1091.

§ 113 (W. Va.) The owner of an oil and gas lease, holding under conflicting claimants and not colluding with either, may appeal on jurisdictional matters from a decree in partition settling the title.—Wright v. Pittman, 79 S. E. 1091.

§ 114 (Ga.) Where tenants in common applied for partition against cotenants, who made no resistance, and the property being indivisible, was sold, the applicants were not entitled to an allowance of fees for their attorneys from the fund; the word "expenses" as used in Civ. Code 1910, §§ 5365, 5366, authorizing the deduction of expenses from the fund, not covering attorney's fees.—Neal v. Neal, 79 S. E. 849.

PARTNERSHIP.

See Justices of the Peace, § 194; Set-Off and Counterclaim, § 44; Trover and Conversion, § 17; Wills, § 6.

I. THE RELATION.

(B) As to Third Persons.

§ 37 (Ga.App.) Where a bank made a loan, represented by two notes executed in the name of the partnership by one member thereof, in reliance upon a statement of each of the alleged partners, that they were members of the firm, the partnership was estopped to deny its existence and membership in a subsequent action on the notes.—Swygert Bros. v. Bank of Haralson, 79 S. E. 759.

(C) Evidence.

§ 48 (Ga.App.) A partnership may be proved by evidence that each of the partners admitted its existence.—Swygert Bros. v. Bank of Haralson, 79 S. E. 759.

§ 54 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action on a note against a partnership, defendants relied on the defense that the person who executed the note was not a partner, evidence that each of the partners admitted that such person was a partner was sufficient to prove the existence of the partnership.—Swygert Bros. v. Bank of Haralson, 79 S. E. 759.

Evidence in an action on a note against a partnership as maker thereof held to sustain a finding that the partnership existed as alleged.—Id.

Only slight evidence is necessary to bind parties as partners in their relation to creditors.—Id.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

(A) Representation of Firm by Partner.

§ 146 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, §§ 3172, 3180, one member of a partnership can bind it by signing its name to a note under seal in the course of partnership business, though not authorized by an instrument under seal.—Swygert Bros. v. Bank of Haralson, 79 S. E. 759.

(D) Actions by or Against Firms or Partners.

§ 199 (Ga.App.) Where partnership goods are sold by one partner, the partnership may recover the purchase price in its own name, though the purchaser did not know of the partnership.—F. T. Hardy & Co. v. Jones Bros., 79 S. E. 246.

VII. DISSOLUTION, SETTLEMENT, AND ACCOUNTING.

(B) Rights, Powers, and Liabilities after Dissolution.

§ 279 (S.C.) Where a partnership, composed of three individuals, which had contracted a debt was dissolved prior to suit upon the debt, and it was agreed that two of the partners should assume the debts of the partnership, that agreement did not affect the rights of the creditor to hold the retiring partner.—Strickland v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 520.

(C) Distribution and Settlement Between Partners and Their Representatives.

§ 303 (W. Va.) Where one partner furnished the entire capital and the other his services and a building for the business, the profits and losses to be shared equally, and the property purchased with the capital was destroyed by fire and the business discontinued, the partner furnishing no capital was chargeable with half the loss of stock, though in addition he lost his services and building.—Gore v. Vines, 79 S. E. 820.

(D) Actions for Dissolution and Accounting.

§ 320 (Ga.App.) An action for a partnership accounting must be brought in the superior court of the county of defendant's residence.—Cox v. Manning, 79 S. E. 484.

§ 329 (W. Va.) Where a written contract either relates to a previously existing partnership business, transactions of the firm prior to the date of the contract, as well as those subsequent thereto, are properly cognizable in a suit for the settlement of the partnership.—Gore v. Vines, 79 S. E. 820.

§ 344 (W. Va.) A decree on a partnership accounting settling the principles whereby the amount of loss chargeable against one partner was to be ascertained, and providing for a future decree when the amount should be ascertained, was not erroneous on the ground of indefiniteness as to the amount.—Gore v. Vines, 79 S. E. 820.

PASSENGERS.

See Carriers, §§ 247-381.

PAYMENT.

See Banks and Banking, § 154; Bills and Notes, §§ 426, 499; Chattel Mortgages, § 235; Compromise and Settlement; Contracts, § 214; Corporations, § 90; Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 277, 300; Mechanics' Liens, §§ 115, 210; Principal and Surety, § 108; Taxation, § 319; Telegraphs and Telephones, §§ 33, 38; Trusts, §§ 72, 77; Vendor and Purchaser, § 215.

II. APPLICATION.

§ 38 (Ga.App.) A person, indebted upon a mortgage and an open account, may direct that a payment be applied to the mortgage, rather than to the account.—Benton-Shingler Co. v. Mills, 79 S. E. 755.

V. RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS.

§ 85 (Ga.App.) Where money due a bank was by mistake paid to another, and the circumstances were such that the company receiving could not in equity and good conscience retain it, and that it lost nothing by the payment, and would be in no worse position after the mistakes were corrected than before, the parties paying the money were entitled to recover it.—Pine Belt Lumber Co. v. Morrison & Harvey, 79 S. E. 363.

§ 89 (Ga.App.) Where defendant set up a claim for money which, though due a bank on the debt of an insolvent company, was paid to the plaintiff company by defendant through mistake, evidence explanatory of the transactions between defendants and the insolvent company was admissible to show how the mistake came to be made.—Pine Belt Lumber Co. v. Morrison & Harvey, 79 S. E. 363.

PEDIGREE.

See Evidence, §§ 287, 294, 355.

PENALTIES.

PENDENCY OF ACTION.

See Abatement and Revival, § 5; Lis Pendens.

PERJURY.

See Criminal Law, §§ 90, 1122; Indictment and Information, §§ 3, 125.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

§ 1 (Ga.App.) That a witness has made other knowingly false statements under the same oath does not create new offenses, though the concurrence of other similar false statements may supply ground for a heavier penalty than would otherwise have been imposed.—Black v. State, 79 S. E. 173.

Perjury consists in knowingly, willfully, and falsely testifying to a material matter in a judicial proceeding, and the gist of the offense is the disregard of the oath taken; and the offense is complete if there be one false statement made with intent to conceal the truth.—Id.

§ 10 (Ga.App.) For a witness to be sworn as a witness, so as to render him liable to prosecution for perjury, it is not essential that he stand with the rest of the witnesses, or that he have his hand upon the Bible, or raise his hand; but it is sufficient that a lawful oath be administered to him and he assent thereto.—Cox v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

§ 11 (Ga.App.) The test of materiality is whether the alleged false statement could have influenced the decision as to the question at issue in a proceeding in which the perjury was alleged to have been committed; if it could have done so, it was material.—Black v. State, 79 S. E. 173.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 25 (Ga.App.) An indictment should specifically allege, and the proof should show, wherein the testimony on which the perjury is assigned is material to the issue in the trial in which it was delivered.—Black v. State, 79 S. E. 173.

§ 31 (Ga.App.) The burden is on the state to prove, not merely that the accused took the stand as a witness and submitted to an examination as such, but that he was duly sworn; no presumption that he was sworn arising from the fact that he was a witness.—Cox v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

§ 37 (Ga.App.) An instruction which withhold from the jury the determination of whether the alleged false testimony was material to the issue is erroneous.—Cox v. State, 79 S. E. 909.

An instruction defining perjury held erroneous, where it omitted the statement that the false testimony must be material to an issue involved.—Id.

The court should instruct, under Pen. Code 1910, § 259, that a charge of perjury cannot be based upon testimony not delivered in a judicial proceeding, and that, to convict, the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness supported by corroborating circumstances, is required.—Id.

PERPETUITIES.

§ 6 (Ga.) A provision of a will that a certain bequest should remain undivided until the youngest one of the issue of testator's children mentioned should become of age held not in conflict with the rule against perpetuities; a limited effect being given by Civ. Code 1910, § 3678, to those limitations which are not too remote.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 548.

PERSONAL COVENANTS.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

See Appeal and Error, § 1058; Evidence, § 548; Master and Servant, § 92.

§ 3 (W.Va.) Under Code 1906, c. 150, § 9, as amended and re-enacted by Acts 1907, c. 66 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 150), the state board of health has discretion to make reasonable regulations as to licensing medical licentiates of other states with whose licensing authorities reciprocal relations have been established, and to refuse to grant licenses to those who have not complied with such regulations.—Thomas v. State Board of Health, 79 S. E. 725.

A regulation of the state board of health which requires a foreign medical licentiate to reside and practice his profession in his state for one year before application for a license is reasonable.—Id.

A regulation of the state board of health that a foreign applicant for license to practice medicine shall have practiced one year in the foreign state contemplates that such practice shall have been in compliance with the laws of that state.—Id.

The interpretation given by the state board of health to a regulation adopted by it relative to the licensing of applicants to practice medicine will be followed by the court unless clearly unreasonable and arbitrary.—Id.

II. DECLARATION, COMPLAINT, PETITION, OR STATEMENT.

§ 64 (Ga.) A petition in a suit by a wife to cancel a deed made by her to her husband as a cloud on her title, because it was a forgery and represented a contract of sale by her of her separate estate to her husband, in violation of Civ. Code 1910, § 3009, was not multifarious.—Echols v. Green, 79 S. E. 557.

III. PLEA OR ANSWER, CROSS-COMPLAINT, AND AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

(A) Defenses in General.

§ 85 (N.C.) A defendant is bound to take notice of any order made in the regular term extending the time of pleading, and the law presumes that he has full notice of it, particularly where he himself is an attorney.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

§ 93 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 5649, authorizing inconsistent pleas, plea of failure of consideration and plea of rescission may be pleaded in an action for goods sold.—Kerr Glass Mfg. Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 79 S. E. 381.

§ 95 (S.C.) Under Code Civ. Proc. 1912, §§ 220-222, 224, 227, where an action on a note formerly held by a savings bank all of whose assets were taken over by a trust company, which then changed its name, was brought in the name of the savings bank, plaintiff should have been permitted to amend in this respect.—Citizens' Savings Bank v. Ebird, 79 S. E. 637.

(F) Affidavit of Defense or of Merits.

§ 155 (W.Va.) A verification of a plea when in the form prescribed by Code 1906, c. 125, § 42, was insufficient to constitute the affidavit of defense provided for by section 46, where, when read with the pleading, it did not constitute a substantial denial of liability in whole or in part.—Woods v. Teter, 79 S. E. 658.

IV. REPLICATION OR REPLY AND SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS.

§ 165 (W.Va.) A replication is unnecessary, where the answer admits the allegations of the bill.—Wright v. Pittman, 79 S. E. 1091.

V. DEMURRER OR EXCEPTION.

§ 199 (Ga.App.) A demurrer by defendant held too late, when not filed at the appearance term.—Avery & Co. v. Pope, 79 S. E. 946.

§ 199 (W.Va.) The defendant, in an action at law in which the office judgment has become final, but is not entered, may demur to the declaration.—Wilson v. Shrader, 79 S. E. 1083.

§ 204 (Ga.App.) A demurrer to an entire answer for irrelevancy and insufficiency, which does not specify any particular defects, is properly overruled if some of the paragraphs thereof, in the light of the allegations in all, set up a sufficient defense.—Wardlaw v. Frederick, 79 S. E. 523.

§ 204 (W.Va.) A general demurrer to a declaration containing more than one count is properly overruled where one of the counts is good, though the others are bad.—Selvey v. Grafton Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 656.

§ 208 (Ga.App.) Where a demurrer for irrelevancy attacks a paragraph as a whole, without specifying the irrelevant matter, the demurrant cannot complain that the entire paragraph, which contained both relevant and irrelevant matter, was not stricken.—Wardlaw v. Frederick, 79 S. E. 523.

§ 214 (Ga.) While a demurrer admits facts well pleaded, where the petition alleged that a second note was collateral to the first, but the copies of the notes attached showed that this allegation was incorrect, the demurrer admitted the fact shown by the notes, rather than the interpretation alleged by the pleader.—Strickland v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 539.

§ 216 (Ga.App.) A demurrer, which was insufficient, in that it failed to specifically point out the defect in the petition, was properly overruled, though the petition may have been demurrable.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Whitney, 79 S. E. 181.

§ 218 (N.C.) Where a complaint was dismissed on demurrer, it was improper to award a judgment adjudicating title to the land in controversy, ordering a writ of possession and assessing damages.—Cavanaugh v. Jarman, 79 S. E. 673.

§ 221 (Ga.App.) Where a demurrer to a petition is improperly overruled, further proceedings at the trial are nugatory.—Martin v. Cox, 79 S. E. 89.

§ 225 (Ga.App.) Where a demurrer to a plea is sustained with leave to amend, and subsequently an amendment is filed without objection, the original and amended plea should be considered together in determining whether a defense is set forth.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 287.

Where defendant unsuccessfully excepts to an order requiring him to amend his answer, he does not thereby waive his right to amend.—Id.

VI. AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADINGS AND REPLEADER.

§ 237 (Ga.App.) Either party, by proper amendment, may conform his pleadings to the evidence which has been introduced.—Hyer v. C. E. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 58.

Pleadings may be amended after the close of the evidence and argument, provided the amendment is supported by the evidence, and does not necessitate the introduction of new parties or a new cause of action.—Id.

§ 243 (Ga.App.) In a bailor's action for the loss of two freight cars, it was not error to permit plaintiff to strike from his petition an allegation which was made merely by way of inducement, and was not essential to his case.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bunn, 79 S. E. 947.

§ 248 (Ga.App.) An amendment to the petition in an action to recover a statutory penalty for failure to deliver a telegram did not set forth a new cause of action, where it merely corrected a mistake as to the name of the place where the telegram was received, and it appeared that the same telegram was referred to in both the original and amended petitions.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Calhoun, 79 S. E. 371.

§ 268 (W.Va.) Where the verification of a special plea in the form prescribed by Code 1906, c. 125, § 42, when considered together with the plea, was wholly inadequate to constitute the affidavit of defense prescribed by section 46, the court properly refused, after an adjournment of term, to permit it to be amended to conform to the requirements of such affidavit.—Woods v. Teter, 79 S. E. 658.

VIII. PROPERTY, OYER, AND EXHIBITS

§ 308 (Ga.App.) Where, in a suit on a note against a retiring partner, he filed an amended answer alleging a transfer of his interest to plaintiff and another, who agreed to pay all the firm's indebtedness, including the note, and that all of the firm's papers were delivered to plaintiff, it was not demurrable for failure to attach an itemized statement of the indebtedness of the firm, together with the contract by which plaintiff assumed the firm debts.—Hyer v. C. K. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 58.

X. FILING, SERVICE, AND WITHDRAWAL.

§ 336 (S.C.) Under Code Civ. Proc. 1912, § 448, authorizing service by mail, and section 450, making section 448 inapplicable to service of "process," a complaint may be served by mail, as "process" is a writ, summons, or order issued in a judicial proceeding to acquire jurisdiction of a person or his property, to expedite the cause or enforce the judgment.—Royal Exchange Assurance of London v. Bennettsville & C. R. Co., 79 S. E. 104.

XI. MOTIONS.

§ 343 (N.C.) Where, in a partition proceeding, no exception was taken by plaintiff to an order of the clerk setting aside a judgment in his favor and allowing defendant to file an answer raising an issue of fraud, plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment on the whole record.—Turner v. Davis, 79 S. E. 257.

§ 360 (Ga.App.) A judgment striking a defense to the foreclosure of a mortgage, because filed without leave and after filing of the original affidavit of illegality, does not preclude defendant from amending at a subsequent term the affidavit of illegality, setting up the defense that he sought to raise in the amendment stricken.—Benton-Shingler Co. v. Mills, 79 S. E. 755.

XIII. DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS, WAIVER, AND AID BY VERDICT OR JUDGMENT.

§ 409 (Ga.App.) A plea, bad in substance, may be ignored or the defect taken advantage of by motion to strike, or by objection to the evidence, or by a request to instruct to disregard the plea, or in any other proper way, even though it has been amended without objection.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 237.

A plaintiff may object at any time in any proper manner to a plea which is bad in substance, unless he is estopped from challenging its sufficiency by a judgment which he himself invoked.—Id.

§ 417 (Ga.App.) Where defendant amends his plea to meet a ruling sustaining a demurrer, he thereby waives his right to except to the order requiring the amendment.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 237.

PLEAS.

See Criminal Law, §§ 274-282.

PLEDGES.

§ 34 (Ga.) A pledgor cannot recover his pledge of his pledgee's assignee without paying or tendering the amount of the debt secured, unless the facts excuse a tender.—Payne v. Power, 79 S. E. 771.

A pledgor's offer to tender the amount of the debt secured held not equivalent to a tender so as to entitle him to recover his pledge.—Id.

POISONS.

See Criminal Law, § 1171.

§ 2 (Ga.App.) Pen. Code 1910, § 459, and Civ. Code 1910, § 1651, regulating the furnishing or sale of narcotic drugs, was intended not only to prevent traffic in such drugs, but also to lessen the evils consequent upon their habitual use.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

§ 4 (Ga.App.) It is a penal offense under Pen. Code 1910, § 459, to give, furnish, or sell any of the narcotic drugs mentioned in Acts 1907, p. 121 (Civ. Code 1910, § 1651), except upon the conditions prescribed therein.—Silver v. State, 79 S. E. 919.

POLICE.

POLICE POWER.

See Constitutional Law, §§ 238, 275, 276; Municipal Corporations, §§ 591, 604.

POSSESSION.

See Adverse Possession; Husband and Wife. § 201; Possessory Warrant.

POSSESSORY WARRANT.

§ 2 (Ga.App.) A judgment awarding the property in dispute to defendant was proper, where the undisputed testimony showed that plaintiff had voluntarily parted with its possession.—Lotz v. Walker, 79 S. E. 169.

A possessory warrant is not proper means for the recovery of personal property, unless the possession of the property was acquired by fraud or violence and without the consent of the complaining party.—Id.

§ 2 (Ga.App.) Where personal property has been left by the owner with an agent to be kept until called for, and the agent refuses to deliver it on demand, a possessory warrant will lie, though the possession was not acquired violently or fraudulently.—Grantham v. Lance, 79 S. E. 481.

§ 3 (Ga.App.) Where defendant in a possessory warrant to recover a deed had not been in peaceable possession in his own right for four years, and the evidence tended to show that plaintiff in the warrant had possessed the right to demand the deed for less than two years, a dismissal of the warrant was unauthorized; no presumption arising that defendant's possession was lawful.—Grantham v. Lance, 79 S. E. 481.

POWERS.

See Wills, §§ 600, 601, 689, 693.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND EXECUTION.

§ 32 (S. C.) Where a gift of property in trust gave the beneficiary a power of appointment by "her last will and testament authenticated in due form of law," such power cannot be executed except by will.—Huggins v. Price, 79 S. E. 798.

§ 33 (Ga.) Where a donee of a power to appportion property and appoint from a class certain persons to hold the appportionment made by the donee, under the conditions imposed by the donor's will creating the power, executes a will devising the specific property in parcels to appointees selected from the proper class, such will is an act indicative of the donee's intention to execute the power.—Grayson v. Germania Bank, 79 S. E. 124.

§ 34 (Ga.) Where testator made specific devises to his children and issue of deceased children, with certain conditions, and devised certain property to his wife for life, with power to devise to such of testator's children or issue of deceased children as she might desire, upon the conditions prescribed in his will, a will by the wife, in which she devised the property without condition to two children and two grandchildren of testator, was a good execution of the power.—Grayson v. Germania Bank, 79 S. E. 124.

§ 38 (Ga.) Where the quantity of interest to be taken by an appointee is expressly limited by the instrument creating the power, and the donee is only authorized to appoint the property over which the estate is to ride, an appointment by the donee of an interest exceeding that intended to be given to the appointee is tantamount to an exercise of the power of appointment to the extent of the power.—Grayson v. Germania Bank, 79 S. E. 124.

I. THE RELATION.

(A) Creation and Existence.

§ 21 (Ga.App.) While mere hearsay evidence of declarations of agency is inadmissible to establish agency, a person may testify that he acted as another's agent.—Great Southern Accident & Fidelity Co. v. Guthrie, 79 S. E. 162.

II. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

(A) Execution of Agency.

§ 78 (W.Va.) Evidence of an agent's acquiescence in the principal's statements of the account between them and of his failure to object to same, supplemented by evidence showing the existence of the relationship and course of business between them, held sufficient evidence of the agent's liability, in the absence of opposing evidence, to call for a verdict against him.—Indiana & Ohio Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Bowman, 79 S. E. 651.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

(A) Powers of Agent.

§ 92 (N.C.) The acts of an agent within the authority given, either express or implied, as well as those acts within the scope of his apparent authority, are binding upon the principal.—Latham v. Field, 79 S. E. 865.

§ 103 (Ga.App.) Where an agent, authorized to sell corporate stock for cash only, took a note for stock sold, and attached the stock to the note, title to the stock did not pass to the purchaser, though he had no knowledge of the terms of the contract between the corporation and the agent.—Great Southern Accident & Fidelity Co. v. Guthrie, 79 S. E. 162.

Presumptively an agent can sell only for cash.—Id.

§ 103 (Ga.App.) Where an agent takes an order for personal property subject to the approval of his principal, no sale is completed until the principal approves the order, though the agent has accepted part payment of the price, unless such payment has been paid to, and accepted by, the principal with knowledge of the terms of the order.—City Drug Co. v. American Soda Fountain Co., 79 S. E. 376.

§ 116 (Ga.App.) A cotton factor's agent authorized to solicit cotton shipments is presumptively authorized to make the terms under which the cotton shall be shipped, sold, and handled by his principal, and, under Civ. Code 1910, § 3595, this rule is not altered by any secret instructions to the agent by the principal.—John Flannery Co. v. James, 79 S. E. 912.

§ 119 (N.C.) Where a written contract for the sale of a piano declared that it contained the entire contract, and that no agent was authorized to alter it, defendant, claiming a parol agreement for a credit to be allowed for recommendation, made by the selling agent, held bound to prove the agent's authority to waive the provisions of the contract.—Cable Piano Co. v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 506.

§ 119 (S.C.) A principal who would escape liability for the acts of his agent done within the apparent scope of the agency on the ground that the agent's authority was limited has the burden of proving the limitation and notice thereof to the third party.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 899.

§ 131 (N.C.) A principal is as liable for damages from acts performed through an agent as if he had done them himself.—Latham v. Field, 79 S. E. 865.

(B) Undisclosed Agency.

§ 145 (W.Va.) To constitute one a "trader" within Code 1906, c. 100, § 13, providing that, if any person shall transact business as a trader, and fail to disclose the name of his principal, the principal's property shall be liable for the trader's debts, he must be both a buyer and a seller, or a barterer of goods, for profit.—Cable Co. v. Mathers, 79 S. E. 1079.

Where the person to whom pianos and organs are consigned by the owner, to be sold on commission, carries no goods for sale on his own account, he is not a trader within Code 1906, c.

100, § 12, providing that, if any person shall transact business as a trader, and fail to disclose the name of his principal, the principal shall be liable for the trader's debts.—Id.

That a consignee of goods to be sold on commission occasionally accepted new musical instruments in part payment for old ones held not to constitute him a "barterer" of goods so as to render the consigned property liable for his debts under Code 1906, c. 100, § 13.—Id.

A principal's property in the hands of his agent, who is not himself a trader, for sale on commission, is not liable for the agent's debts.—Id.

(F) Actions.

§ 184 (Ga.App.) Where money paid to an agent ought in equity to be returned, the owner of the money may sue either the agent, or the principal, or both, for money had and received.—Great Southern Accident & Fidelity Co. v. Guthrie, 79 S. E. 162.

Where an agent, authorized to sell corporate stock only for cash, without authority employed another agent, who made the sale, collected the proceeds, deducted a portion for his services, and remitted the balance to the first agent, who paid none of it to the corporation, the purchaser of the stock, upon the first agent's refusal to deliver the stock, was entitled to recover from him the amount he received, but not the sum retained by the second agent.—Id.

§ 193 (N.C.) In an action for breach of a contract for the sale of cotton, made through a third person, evidence on the question of the defendant's liability as principal held sufficient to go to the jury.—Latham v. Field, 79 S. E. 865.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

See Appeal and Error, §§ 327, 914, 1039; Appearance, §§ 9, 25; Constitutional Law, § 306; Corporations, § 484; Costs, § 238; Evidence, §§ 165, 423; Guaranty; Indemnity; Recognizances; Taxation, § 545.

III. DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

§ 97 (Ga.App.) Under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 3543, a change in the terms of a contract without the consent of the surety discharges him, though the change inures to the benefit of both the principal and surety.—Little Rock Furniture Co. v. Jones & Co., 79 S. E. 375.

§ 100 (Ga.App.) That a building contract provided for changes in the structure to be erected did not authorize a change as to the method and amount of the payments without consent of the sureties on the contractor's bond.—Blackburn v. Morel, 79 S. E. 492.

§ 105 (Ga.App.) Where a new note is accepted by the payee or indorsee of a note in renewal of a note previously given, without the consent of a surety thereon, this amounts to a novation and discharges the surety.—E. Matthews & Son v. Richards, 79 S. E. 227.

§ 108 (Ga.App.) Mere indulgence or extension of time of payment of a note, granted to the maker without consideration, will not discharge a surety or indorser.—E. Matthews & Son v. Richards, 79 S. E. 227.

§ 114 (Ga.App.) Where a cropper, the principal on a note, delivered cotton to his landlord, the surety on the note, to sell and apply the proceeds in payment thereof, and where the payee induced the surety to apply the proceeds on the cropper's individual note by misrepresenting to him that he was in law bound on such note also, the surety was not released thereby, especially where he made no offer before suit to restore the status quo by returning the note paid.—Jones Bros. v. Watson, 79 S. E. 239.

§ 117 (Ga.App.) Where the owner of a building under construction made payments to the contractor in excess of the amount authorized by the contract, and failed to require affidavits provided for therein, the sureties on the contractor's bond, as their liability could not be extended, were discharged, regardless of how the change in the contract affected them.—Blackburn v. Morel, 79 S. E. 492.

IV. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS.

§ 152 (W.Va.) A suit by a bank to enforce the obligation on its cashier's bond should be brought jointly against the surviving obligors and the personal representatives of the deceased obligors.—Clark v. Nickell, 79 S. E. 1020.

§ 156 (Ga.App.) In an action against the sureties on a bond, the court properly refused to strike a plea that defendants did not sign the bond as sued on, but that it had been changed after they signed it, so as to make it appear that the principal signed, not for himself, but as agent and next friend for two minors; such plea being in effect a denial of the contract sued on, and not being governed by the general rules governing the alteration of instruments, so that allegation of fraudulent alteration was not necessary.—Hobbs v. Taylor, 79 S. E. 356.

V. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF SURETY.

(B) As to Principal.

§ 177 (Ga.App.) The contract of a surety or accommodation indorser is executory until payment by the surety is actually made.—Savannah Ice Co. v. Canal-Louisiana Bank & Trust Co., 79 S. E. 45.

§ 183 (Va.) A surety company cannot hold the estate of the principal debtor liable for loss sustained by a subsequent contractor who contracted to complete the building after the first contractor abandoned it, where the second contractor's loss under his contract was voluntarily paid by the surety company.—Tatterson v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 79 S. E. 334.

(C) As to Co-Surety.

§ 199 (W.Va.) Evidence on a surety's motion under Code 1906, c. 101, § 5, for a judgment of contribution, held to support a judgment in his favor.—Selvey's Ex'r's v. Armstrong's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1019.

Notice of a surety's motion, under Code 1906, c. 101, § 5, for a judgment of contribution against a co-surety, was sufficient where it described the note by naming the parties and recited payment of the judgment and costs, though it did not state the day or amount of the note.—Id.

On a surety's motion under Code 1906, c. 101, § 5, for a judgment of contribution, the judgment obtained against the sureties was properly admitted in evidence.—Id.

II. SERVICE.*(A) Personal Service in General.

§ 64 (Ga.App.) Where an officer having a summons for a husband and wife drove up to the front of their residence and told the husband that he had a paper to serve on him and his wife and handed same to him, there was not a sufficient service on the wife, where she testified that she did not hear the conversation, though she was ten feet from the husband; it further appearing that but one copy of the writ was handed to the husband.—Ambrose v. Barber, 79 S. E. 1135.

§ 67 (Ga.) The acknowledgment of service, entered after the appearance term, held not an acknowledgment that the petition and process had been legally served on defendant the requisite time before the appearance term.—Bell v. Verdel, 79 S. E. 849.

(D) Privileges and Exemptions.

§ 126 (N.C.) Service of process upon one attending court as a witness is not void but voidable and hence must be attacked by motion to set aside, the defendant appearing specially for the purpose of a motion; his remedy, in case the motion is overruled, being to except, answer, and appeal from the final judgment.—Dell School v. Peirce, 79 S. E. 687.

(E) Return and Proof of Service.

§ 148 (Ga.) It is not error to exclude testimony of an attorney that he directed service of process in another action to be made upon a corporation defendant in the pending suit, where the entry showed it to have been made upon an individual.—Hodges v. Stuart Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 462.

§ 149 (Ga.App.) On the trial of a traverse to a return of personal service, proof of service by leaving a copy at the residence of defendant will not avail the plaintiff.—Ambrose v. Barber, 79 S. E. 1135.

III. DEFECTS, OBJECTIONS, AND AMENDMENT.

§ 163 (Ga.App.) It was not error to permit process to be amended and thereafter order service to be perfected, returnable to a later term of the court; there being no time limit when amendments to writs shall be made.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Whitney, 79 S. E. 181.

§ 164 (Ga.) The refusal of the court to permit one who, as sheriff, made service upon the defendant, a corporation, in a prior action, to amend his entry of service, which showed service upon an individual, was not erroneous, where it did not appear that he was still sheriff.—Hodges v. Stuart Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 462.

PROHIBITION.*I. NATURE AND GROUNDS.

§ 10 (Va.) Code 1904, § 437a, as amended by Acts 1910, c. 39, provides an exclusive remedy for the correction of an erroneous assessment of mineral lands, so that the circuit court had no jurisdiction of an application therefor by the state auditor of public accounts under Code 1904, § 573, and it would be restrained by a writ of prohibition.—Grief v. Kegley, 79 S. E. 1062.

§ 10 (W.Va.) Under Code 1906, c. 110, § 1, authorizing the writ of prohibition, when the inferior court "exceeds its legitimate powers," prohibition lies to prevent a trial court from entertaining a plea to an indictment which challenges the legality or sufficiency of the evidence on which it was found.—*Noll v. § 186 (W.Va.) A general entry of land afterwards carried into survey and grant, and relied on as proof of an exception from another grant of land susceptible of inclusion by the description of the entry, but lying outside the lines of the entry and patent founded, may be construed as calling only for the land surveyed and granted.—William James' Sons Co. v. Crouch, 79 S. E. 815.

§ 186 (W.Va.) A decree of dismissal in a suit for the sale of lands as forfeited for the school fund, which was based on a report of the commissioner of school lands pursuant to the latter provision of Code 1906, c. 105, § 6, and actually dismissed lands from the cause, held not a mere retraxit, which could not be made over objection of a claimant of leave to redeem, but an adjudication, though it recited that it was entered on motion and by consent.—State v. Reed, 79 S. E. 939.

Where a new county is formed from the territory of a county in which a suit for the sale of forfeited school lands has been instituted, the commissioner of school lands of the new county may make the report of the suit which is contemplated by the latter provision of Code 1906, c. 105, § 6, providing for such report.—Id.

A hearing of the matters raised by the report of the commissioner, pursuant to Code 1906, c. 105, § 6, will not be delayed to enable a formal party to the cause, claiming the right to redeem, to contest same, where the matters are the same as those already presented, and as to which he has had ample time to present his case.—Id.

Where it appears by the report that certain forfeited lands involved in the suit have been granted by the state to another, and that there has been no subsequent forfeiture, the suit may properly be dismissed as to such lands.—Id.

V. RIGHT OF WAY AND OTHER INTERESTS IN LAND.

§ 68 (W.Va.) A railroad company's possession of a strip of land which it fenced and cared for without objection for a long period of time, and upon a part of which it maintained its tracks, held to constitute a practical construction of a deed which granted it such strip for a right of way without specifying the width, and to fix such width as coextensive with such possession, although the possession and acquiescence could not have commenced with the date of the deed or the construction of the road.—Ashbaugh v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 741.

The construction of a side track within an area to which a railroad company had acquired a right by possession and use without objection under a deed granting a strip of land for a right of way without fixing its width held not an enjoyment of the easement granted by the deed and defined by the conduct of the parties.—Id.

§ 72 (Ga.App.) Where a railroad company pursuant to a consolidation takes over the property of another company, which property is subject to a covenant running with the land, requiring the building of a side track and warehouse, and where it proceeds to operate and manage same, it may be held liable in a suit for breach of the covenant, though the property is not formally transferred to it until after the commencement of the suit.—Reidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

A railroad company's contract to locate a station at a given point is not void per se, but is enforceable against the company, unless performance will render it impossible for the company to discharge its duties to the public.—Id.

The damages consequent upon the breach of a railroad company's covenant to construct a side track and erect a warehouse to be used as a depot, in consideration of a grant of a right of way, are not necessarily speculative, though resting upon the opinion of witnesses.—Id.

That a railroad company which, in consideration of the grant of a right of way, has covenanted to construct a side track and erect a warehouse at a certain point is unable for want of room to comply with its covenant, after laying its track in the center of the right of way according to custom, will not excuse a breach of such covenant, since the company could comply with the covenant by condemning additional land.—Id.

VI. CONSTRUCTION, MAINTENANCE, AND EQUIPMENT.

§ 94 (N.C.) A railroad, though operating under legislative franchise, is subject to all reasonable police regulations, and the acceptance of its charter is upon the implied condition that it will comply with all reasonable regulations of a town regarding the use of its streets.—State v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 79 S. E. 447.

§ 95 (N.C.) An ordinance requiring railroads on a certain street to fill the ditches beside the tracks and maintain the right of way on a reasonable grade with the street is valid where, although the ditches are necessary for drainage, they can be covered or tiled at moderate expense.—State v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 79 S. E. 447.

§ 103 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 2699, requires cattle guards for the protection of landowners whose lands are traversed by the railroad, and not for the protection of those whose lands merely abut upon the right of way.—Louisville & N. E. Co. v. Butler, 79 S. E. 776.

X. OPERATION.*(O) Companies and Persons Liable for Injuries.

§ 258 (N.C.) Purchasers of a railroad from receivers are liable on equitable principles for injuries caused by the negligence of the receivers while operating the road.—Lassiter v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 264.

§ 260 (Va.) Where one coal company allows another to use its railroad yards, it owes no duty to a licensee on an engine of the other company to promulgate rules for the movement of engines in the yards.—Steele's Adm'r v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 346.

(D) Injuries to Licensees or Trespassers in General.

§ 276 (Va.) The rule that one who takes passage on a freight train assumes the risk of such jerking and jarring as are incident to the operation of such trains applies more strongly to a licensee than to a passenger, for whose safety the carrier is held to the exercise of extraordinary care.—Steele's Adm'r v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 346.

§ 282 (Va.) In an action for the death of a coal miner who was killed by being knocked from the platform of an engine, where he was riding for his own convenience, by the impact of an engine of the defendant company with a car coupled to the engine on which he was riding, evidence held insufficient to show any actionable negligence on the part of the employees of the defendant company.—Steele's

Adm'r v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 346.

In an action for the death of one who was killed while riding upon an engine of one coal company in the yards of the defendant company, evidence held insufficient to show any proximate causal connection between the failure of the defendant company to promulgate rules for the movement of engines in its yards and the injury.—Id.

(F) Accidents at Crossings.

§ 301 (N.C.) Where a railroad track crosses a public highway, both a traveler and the railroad have equal rights to cross, but the traveler must yield the right of way to the railroad in the ordinary course of the latter's business.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

A railroad company and a traveler on a highway approaching a crossing are charged with a mutual duty of keeping a careful lookout for danger, and the degree of vigilance is in proportion to the known danger.—Id.

A greater degree of vigilance is required of a traveler approaching a railroad crossing than is required of employees of the company who are engaged in the performance of their duties.—Id.

§ 312 (N.C.) While a train has the right of way at a crossing, it is the duty of the engineer to give signals and exercise vigilance in approaching such crossings.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

The act of a railroad company in making a flying switch across a public highway in a populous town or village is gross and criminal negligence.—Id.

§ 317 (Ga.) Where a person riding on a two-horse wagon driven by another is, through no negligence of his own, injured at a crossing by a train running at a speed in excess of that prescribed by ordinance, he may recover against the railroad company for such injury.—Georgia & F. Ry. v. Newton, 79 S. E. 142.

§ 324 (N.C.) If a traveler fails to exercise the degree of care required of him when approaching a railroad crossing, it is such negligence as will bar his recovery, if it was the proximate cause of his injury.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

Where a traveler is deceived by appearances produced by the negligence of the railroad company in such a way and to such an extent that a man of ordinary prudence would not anticipate danger, the company cannot escape liability by imputing the blame to him.—Id.

§ 325 (Va.) A railway mail clerk in the discharge of his duties, while he is required to exercise ordinary care in using a defective door of the mail car, and cannot recover if he fails to do so, does not assume the risk of the defect, even though he knew of it and did not report it.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

§ 326 (N.C.) If a traveler's view is obstructed or his hearing an approaching train is prevented, especially if through the fault of the railroad company, and the company's servants fail to warn him of the approach of a train, and he attempts to cross the track, having used his faculties as best he could under the circumstances, negligence will not be imputed to him.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

§ 327 (N.C.) Before attempting to cross the track, a traveler must look and listen in both directions for approaching trains, if not prevented from doing so by the fault of the railroad company.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

The duty of a traveler to look and listen when approaching a railroad crossing is not always an absolute one, but may be qualified by attendant circumstances.—Id.

§ 334 (N.C.) A traveler who is without fault, or if his fault is excused by some act of the company, or the company has the last clear chance to avoid the accident, when suddenly confronted by a peril, may adopt such means of extrication as are apparently necessary, and is held only to such measure of care as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in the same circumstances.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

§ 337 (N.C.) The act of a railroad company in making a flying switch across a public highway, where no warning was given of the approach of the rear portion of the train and it was concealed behind cars upon a siding, held to have been the proximate cause of injuries to a boy attempting to cross the track.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

§ 347 (N.C.) Evidence of measurements of the width of certain cars, not shown to have been of the same width as those upon a siding at the time of an accident, held inadmissible to show that cars could not have been at the place claimed by plaintiff without being struck by a train on another track.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

§ 350 (N.C.) In an action for injuries to a 12 year old boy, who was injured, at a railroad crossing over a frequented street, by the rear portion of a train engaged in making a flying switch, and which was concealed by cars upon a siding, evidence held sufficient to take to the jury the question of the boy's exercise of due care.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

(G) Injuries to Persons on or near Tracks.

§ 358 (Va.) While a railroad company is entitled to a clear track and is not ordinarily liable for injuries to persons thereon, yet if it knows that persons are in the habit of using its track for a footpath it is bound to exercise reasonable care to prevent injury to such persons.—Nesbit v. Webb, 79 S. E. 330.

§ 359 (Ga.App.) The only duty a railroad company owes to the driver of an automobile who crosses the track elsewhere than at a public crossing is to refrain from wanton injury and to use ordinary care to prevent injury.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 362 (N.C.) Under Laws 1909, c. 446, requiring railroad locomotives to carry an electric headlight at night, the failure to do so is unlawful, and constitutes negligence per se.—Shepherd v. North Carolina R. Co., 79 S. E. 968.

§ 369 (Ga.App.) The failure to comply with the statutory requirements as to signals and checking the train on approaching a highway crossing does not constitute negligence, for which recovery may be had by a person not upon or approaching a public crossing.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 387 (Ga.App.) A railroad company is not liable for injuries caused by the running of a railroad train, if the person injured could have avoided the consequences of the company's negligence.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 389 (Ga.App.) Failure to give the statutory signals required upon approaching a public crossing is not the proximate cause of an injury to a person not at the crossing, and who was aware of the approach of the train.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

A railroad company is not liable for injuries caused by an unavoidable accident.—Id.

§ 394 (Ga.App.) Where the petition in an action for injuries on a track alleges that defendant's agents knew of a custom to use a portion of the track as a passway, and that the place where the accident occurred was so used with permission of defendant's officers, it need not allege the names of such agents and officers.

—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Whitney, 79 S. E. 181.

§ 395 (Ga.App.) Where a railroad company defends on the ground that plaintiff was at fault equally with, or more, than itself, or that plaintiff could by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the consequences of the negligence, or that the injury was due to unavoidable accident, it was entitled to recover on proof of any one of such defenses.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 396 (Ga.App.) Where it appears that an injury has been caused by the running of a railroad train, the burden is upon the company to prove that it exercised all ordinary and reasonable care.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 400 (Ga.App.) It is for the jury to determine whether it is want of ordinary care for a licensee to step on a railroad track without looking for the approach of a train.—Southern Ry. Co. v. Lofton, 79 S. E. 37.

The question of defendant's negligence was for the jury, where the petition alleged that plaintiff's decedent, while a licensee on a track, was struck by a train running at an unlawful speed without signals, and when the engineer, if he had kept a proper lookout, could have stopped the train before reaching the point where decedent was struck.—Id.

§ 400 (Ga.App.) Where it was undisputed that the driver of an automobile saw a train approaching at some distance, the court should instruct that the failure to ring the bell and blow the whistle was not negligence for which the plaintiff could recover.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 400 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action against a railroad company for the death of plaintiff's minor son, plaintiff produces evidence sufficient to raise the statutory presumption of negligence, and defendant fails to rebut the presumption by evidence of probative weight, it is error to direct a verdict for defendant, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5928.—Eubanks v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 488.

§ 400 (N.C.) In action for death of person struck and killed by a freight train while crossing track some distance from a highway crossing blocked by a train, evidence as to defendant's negligence acid to make a question for the jury.—Shepherd v. North Carolina R. Co., 79 S. E. 968.

(H) Injuries to Animals on or near Tracks.

§ 419 (Ga.App.) Damages are not recoverable for the negligent killing of a dog by a train, there being no evidence that it was caused by the wanton or malicious act of the agents of the railroad.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Swanson, 79 S. E. 77.

§ 419 (N.C.) A railroad company was negligent in failing to sound the alarm whistle when turkeys were on the track which were seen, or should have been seen, by the engineer in time to sound the whistle.—Lewis v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 283.

§ 441 (Ga.App.) The statutory presumption of negligence, arising on proof that cattle were killed by a locomotive of defendant, not having been rebutted by the evidence, a verdict based on such presumption was authorized by law.—Georgia & F. Ry. Co. v. Norman, 79 S. E. 86.

§ 441 (Ga.App.) The presumption of negligence which arises from the killing of live stock by a railroad company extends only to the acts of negligence alleged in plaintiff's pleadings.—South Georgia Ry. Co. v. Atkins, 79 S. E. 226.

§ 448 (N.C.) Evidence, in an action against a railroad company for running over and killing turkeys, held sufficient to take to the jury the question whether defendant's failure to sound the alarm whistle was the proximate cause of the injury.—Lewis v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 283.

§ 446 (W.Va.) In an action to recover for injuries to plaintiff's horse on defendant's track, demurrer to evidence held rightly sustained.—Bower v. Virginian Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 727.

(I) Fires.

§ 454 (W.Va.) To relieve from liability for fire caused by sparks from a locomotive, it is not essential that the locomotive be equipped with the best and most approved spark arrester, but only that it have an approved and reasonably safe one.—Mills v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1090.

§ 480 (W.Va.) The presumption of negligence arising from proof that the fire was started by sparks from a locomotive can only be repelled by proof that the locomotive was equipped and operated in a reasonably safe way, and not by proof alone that it was equipped with a proper spark arrester.—Mills v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1090.

§ 485 (W.Va.) In an action for damages from fire started by sparks from a locomotive, it was error to instruct that the presumption of negligence which arises from proof that the fire so started may be repelled by proof that the locomotive was equipped with an approved spark arrester.—Mills v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1090.

RAPE

See Criminal Law, § 762.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

§ 12 (Ga.App.) Sexual intercourse with a woman incapable of consenting is rape, though she makes no resistance, but the mere fact that a woman is weak-minded does not disable her from giving consent.—Morrow v. State, 79 S. E. 63.

Under Pen. Code 1910, § 34, a female under 10 years of age cannot consent to sexual intercourse, and, under section 33, incapacity to consent is presumed between the ages of 10 and 14, but, after the age 14 she is presumptively able to consent.—Id.

The test of capacity to consent to sexual intercourse after the age of 14 is mental capacity to understand the sexual act and give intelligent assent.—Id.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

(B) Evidence.

§ 43 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for assault with intent to rape a female who was more than 14 years old, evidence of her want of physical development was competent only to illustrate her mental capacity.—Morrow v. State, 79 S. E. 63.

§ 53 (Ga.App.) Evidence held insufficient to show that the female made such resistance as indicated that the sexual intercourse attempted by defendant was against her will; and hence the offense at most was an attempt to commit fornication.—Morrow v. State, 79 S. E. 63.

Evidence, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape a female over 14 years old, held insufficient to show mental incapacity to consent to the sexual act.—Id.

III. TITLE TO AND POSSESSION OF PROPERTY.

§ 71 (N.C.) A receiver's possession is that of the court, taken for the purpose of securing the thing in controversy, so that it may be subject to such disposition as the court may finally direct.—Gobbie v. Orrell, 79 S. E. 937.

§ 77 (Ga.) Where a receiver was a mere bailee as to property in his possession, equity would restore possession to the intervener, who proved a title superior, to all others, except a conditional seller, who had the legal title until the balance of the price was paid by intervener.—Penton v. Hall, 79 S. E. 465.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

§ 3 (Ga.App.) Where, in a prosecution for receiving stolen goods, there was no evidence that defendant knew the goods received by him were stolen, a verdict of guilty was unauthorized, though defendant admitted receiving the goods.—Stewart v. State, 79 S. E. 225.

RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

RECITALS.

See Taxation, § 788.

RECOGNIZANCES.

See Appeal and Error, § 914; Appearance, § 9; Bail, § 75.

§ 1 (N.C.) A recognizance is a debt of record acknowledged before a court of competent jurisdiction, binding accused to appear and answer either a specified charge or to such matters as may be objected, to abide the judgment of the court, and not to depart without leave of court.—State v. White, 79 S. E. 297.

§ 10 (Ga.App.) The filing for record of an instrument executed by an agent on behalf of a corporation under its corporate seal, when such instrument is recordable, constitutes notice to third persons, from the time of filing for record, of the presumptive power of the agent to execute it, though it is so defectively recorded by the clerk as to indicate that it was not an instrument under seal.—Blakely Artesian Ice Co. v. Clarke, 79 S. E. 523.

REFERENCE.

See Appeal and Error, § 1022.

III. REPORT AND FINDINGS.

§ 99 (Ga.) The action was equitable in character, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the finding of the auditor in favor of the plaintiff, and the ruling of the presiding judge in overruling the exceptions thereto was not error.—Coward v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

§ 100 (S.C.) An exception to a referee's report, alleging error in allowing plaintiff a certain sum, on the ground that so much was not due, was too general and insufficient to raise the question whether a particular note should have been allowed in the amount found to be due plaintiff.—Simpson v. Cox, 79 S. E. 102.

§ 101 (Ga.) Where the issues of fact in equity were found for plaintiff by a jury on a former trial, and by the auditor on remand, and where the auditor's finding was approved by the judge, a motion for re-reference was properly overruled.—Coward v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

§ 101 (S.C.) The granting of a motion to re-commit to a referee to take further proof is a matter for the trial court's discretion.—Farmers' Bank & Trust Co. v. Southern Granite Co., 79 S. E. 985.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.*I. RIGHT OF ACTION AND DEFENSES.

§ 19 (N.C.) Where there has been a mutual mistake in the execution of a contract or a mistake of one of the parties brought about by the fraud of the other, equity will grant reformation but not for misapprehension of one of the parties as to any facts.—Wilson v. Scarborough, 79 S. E. 811.

II. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 45 (N.C.) Where relief is sought on the ground of mistake or mistake by one party and fraud of the other, the evidence must be clear and convincing and evidence dehors the deed and inconsistent with it must be shown.—Lamm v. Lamm, 79 S. E. 290.

In suit by the children of a deceased husband against the widow by a second marriage for relief against a deed executed to defendant by a third person, the consideration for which was paid by decedent, on the ground that the deed was made to her as a result of her fraud and undue influence, plaintiffs held required to establish the issue only by the greater weight of the evidence.—Id.

§ 45 (N.C.) In an action where it was sought to reform a timber deed on the ground of mistake, evidence held insufficient to show any mutual mistake.—Dameron v. Rowland Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 607.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

§ 1 (W.Va.) A contract for the sale of drug store fixtures held sufficiently definite in the description of the fixtures.—Bernard Gloekler Co. v. Carr, 79 S. E. 732.

§ 23 (W.Va.) An acceptance of an offer to buy store fixtures held a binding contract not revocable by the buyer, though it provided that complete plans, specifications, and details were to be submitted and approved by him.—Bernard Gloekler Co. v. Carr, 79 S. E. 732.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

(C) Delivery and Acceptance of Goods.

§ 161 (Ga.App.) The execution of a bill of lading is not essential to a valid shipment contract, or necessary to constitute such delivery to a common carrier as will be equivalent to delivery to the consignee.—City of Bainbridge v. Smith, 79 S. E. 1130.

§ 176 (Ga.) In an action for the price of cross-ties delivered under a contract calling for an inspection at delivery, an instruction that if the buyer had an opportunity to inspect them, and then discovered that they were not up to specifications, it was his duty to notify the seller of that fact, was proper.—Ellard v. Smith, 79 S. E. 459.

§ 177 (W.Va.) A buyer's refusal to take drug store fixtures in conformity with the contract under which he had bought them was a breach thereof.—Bernard Gloekler Co. v. Carr, 79 S. E. 732.

V. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) Transfer of Title as Between Parties.

§ 202 (Ga.App.) Where personal property is sold for cash, title does not pass until the purchase money is paid.—Bowen v. De Loach, 79 S. E. 371.

Where an absolute sale was made for cash, but the seller received only a small part of the purchase money, his failure to return the same did not operate to pass to the purchaser a title which he could transfer to a third person, but merely gave the purchaser a right to complete the sale and obtain title by payment of the balance due.—Id.

VI. WARRANTIES.

§ 272 (N.C.) A sale of goods by a manufacturer for resale imports an implied warranty that the goods are merchantable.—Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Davenport, 79 S. E. 602.

§ 273 (Ga.App.) Where an article is ordered by a name importing no particular quality, and proves unsuited to the use intended, and for which the seller represented it to be suitable, the buyer is not bound for the purchase price, unless at the time of the purchase he knew the real quality of the article.—Kerr Glass Mfg. Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 79 S. E. 381.

§ 284 (N.C.) A buyer may return goods, if they are unsalable and worthless, for breach of an implied warranty of merchantability.—Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Davenport, 79 S. E. 602.

§ 287 (N.C.) Where a seller accepted a return of a part of goods sold for alleged breach of warranty of merchantability, it could not recover a balance of the contract price.—Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co. v. Davenport, 79 S. E. 602.

VII. REMEDIES OF SELLER.

(B) Actions for Price or Value.

§ 347 (Ga.App.) In a seller's action for the price of a shipment of goods, evidence that the goods had actually been delivered to the defendant buyer by the carrier at destination authorized a judgment for plaintiff, regardless of whether a valid agreement was made to release defendant and look alone to the carrier for the value of the goods.—Rogers-McRorie Co. v. Robeson Cutlery Co., 79 S. E. 874.

§ 358 (Va.) In an action on certain notes given for part of the price of a sawmill outfit, a letter written by plaintiffs to defendants held to show on its face that it related to the matter in controversy and was therefore relevant and admissible.—Davis v. Cole Bros., 79 S. E. 1033.

Whether defendants did not send plaintiffs a note purporting to have been executed by defendants' grandfather as collateral security and whether plaintiffs had not returned the same stating that the maker had repudiated the signature and pronounced the note forged were proper subjects of inquiry.—Id.

A question asked one of the plaintiffs as to his knowledge concerning whether defendant D. sold to his codefendants any timber held admissible.—Id.

§ 363 (Ga.App.) Where the contract sued on was unambiguous, and defendant admitted that he had not complied with its terms, which authorized him to return unsold goods, and where the evidence showed no excuse for such non-compliance, the court properly directed a verdict for plaintiff for the amount sued for.—Joseph Dry Goods Co. v. Home Pattern Co., 79 S. E. 356.

§ 363 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action on a note for the price of a gin outfit, under a contract obligating plaintiff to superintend putting it in place, defendant relied on failure of the machine to work satisfactorily, and the evidence showed that such failure was due to the misplacement of two pulleys, but did not show whether such misplacement was the fault of plaintiff or of defendant, it was error to direct a verdict for plaintiff.—McDuffie v. Lummus Cotton Gin Co., 79 S. E. 493.

§ 364 (Ga.App.) A charge that the buyer may rescind for fraud where he moves with "reasonable promptness," and that restitution of the goods is unnecessary where they are worthless, is in substantial accord with Civ. Code 1910, § 4306.—Kerr Glass Mfg. Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 79 S. E. 381.

(F) Actions for Damages.

§ 370 (Ga.App.) Where goods are sold for future delivery and prior to the time for delivery the purchaser notifies the seller that he will not take and pay for the goods, the seller may treat the contract as rescinded and sue for damages sustained up to the time of the repudiation of the contract.—American Mfg. Co. v. Champion Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 485.

§ 381 (N.C.) Where, in a seller's action for the breach of a contract of sale, the defense was that the contract was procured by fraudulent representations of plaintiff's agent, the burden was on defendant to prove that they were induced to contract by such representations, that in consequence thereof they declined to perform, that they were calculated to deceive and did deceive, and that defendants lost something thereby.—White Sewing Machine Co. v. I. W. Bullock & Co., 79 S. E. 1107.

VIII. REMEDIES OF BUYER.

(A) Recovery of Price.

§ 392 (Ga.App.) Where a buyer of goods to be manufactured repudiates the contract, and the seller fails or refuses to manufacture the goods for delivery at the time fixed in the contract, the seller's only remedy is an action for damages for breach of the contract, and he cannot sue for the price or for the contract price less the cost of manufacture.—American Mfg. Co. v. Champion Mfg. Co., 79 S. E. 485.

Where a buyer of goods to be manufactured repudiates the contract before time for delivery, the seller in order to recover the price, or the price less the cost of manufacture, must manufacture and have available for delivery the entire quantity of the articles contracted for.—Id.

§ 398 (Ga.) In an action for the price of cross-ties of specific dimensions, an instruction that, if the ties were reasonably within the specifications, it was the duty of the buyer to accept them, and that he was liable for the whole contract price, held erroneous.—Ellard v. Smith, 79 S. E. 459.

(D) Actions and Counterclaims for Breach of Warranty.

§ 428 (Ga.App.) In an action for the price of trees sold, the defendant could set off his damages from being compelled to pay notes in the hands of innocent purchasers, given by defendant for trees previously bought, but not as warranted, though the notes were paid after discovery of the breach.—Gillespie v. Bacon Pecan Co., 79 S. E. 212.

§ 435 (Ga.App.) Where the answer in an action for trees sold set up damages from being compelled to pay notes in the hands of an innocent purchaser before maturity, given to plaintiff for trees previously purchased and not as warranted, but failed to state when the notes were given, or to whom they were transferred, or to state facts from which it could be determined whether the holder was an innocent purchaser, such answer was demurrable.—Gillespie v. Bacon Pecan Co., 79 S. E. 212.

§ 437 (Ga.App.) Where the defendant in an action for breach of a contract of warranty of an automobile admitted the "execution" of the contract, this was an admission of the doing of all acts necessary to carry its purpose into effect, and plaintiff was only required to prove breach and damages.—Hall v. Studebaker Corporation of America, 79 S. E. 750.

§ 445 (Ga.App.) In an action for breach of a contract of warranty of an automobile, held, that it was error to grant a nonsuit.—Hall v. Studebaker Corporation of America, 79 S. E. 750.

IX. CONDITIONAL SALES.

§ 467 (Ga.App.) Where a note given for the price of a horse reserves to the seller title to the property until paid for, loss by death without fault of the buyer will fall on the seller, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, given under Civ. Code, 1910, § 4123.—McKinney v. Battle Bros., 79 S. E. 92.

In a contract of sale with reservation of title, a stipulation that the seller does not insure the health, life, or work of the horse, but, "in case of loss or damage to said property, the same shall be the loss of the buyers," includes loss by death.—Id.

§ 472 (Ga.) Where plaintiff sold certain mules for cash and for notes, reserving title in the mules until the notes were paid, and the purchaser took the notes for execution before a notary, receiving at the same time the mules, and returned the notes officially attested the next day to the seller, who recorded them within 30 days, as provided by Civ. Code 1910, §§ 3318, 3319, 3257, and after delivery of the mules and pending execution of the notes the purchaser sold them to defendant, the latter acquired no title as against plaintiff.—Rowe v. Spencer, 79 S. E. 144.

§ 472 (Ga.App.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3318, 3319, a written contract of conditional sale, duly attested and recorded within 30 days from the date of delivery of the property, becomes effective against third persons from such date, though the date of the execution of the contract does not appear therein.—Alexander v. Patterson, 79 S. E. 482.

§ 484 (Ga.App.) Where accused purchased personality on credit, and a third person paid the vendor, who executed a bill of sale to him as security for the debt, a subsequent sale of the property by the debtor without the consent of such person is not a violation of Pen. Code 1910, § 722, forbidding the sale of property conditionally purchased.—Shirley v. State, 79 S. E. 752.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

See Constitutional Law, § 63; Statutes, §§ 76, 219.

II. PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

(A) Establishment, School Lands and Funds, and Regulation in General.

§ 19 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 4116, as amended by Pub. Laws 1913, c. 149, and section 4124, graded school district under control of graded school commissioners held entitled to share in the fund for building schoolhouses reserved by the county board of education from the county school fund.—Board of Graded School Com'rs of City of Winston v. Board of Education of Forsyth County, 79 S. E. 886.

(B) Creation, Alteration, Existence, and Dissolution of Districts.

§ 41 (S.C.) Act Feb. 19, 1913 (28 St. at Large, p. 355), amending Act Jan. 5, 1895 (21 St. at Large, p. 921), by enlarging the Anderson school district, does not violate Const. art. 11, § 5, requiring a new district embracing the territory of an old district to bear its just proportion of any tax for the liquidation of the bonds of the old district.—Burris v. Brock, 79 S. E. 193.

(C) District Debt, Securities, and Taxation.

§ 97 (S.C.) Act Feb. 19, 1913 (28 St. at Large, p. 355), amending Act Jan. 5, 1895 (21 St. at Large, p. 921), by enlarging the Anderson school district, and authorizing the trustees thereof to hold an election on the question of issuing bonds, without a petition of a majority of freeholders, does not violate Const. art. 2, § 13, making such petition a condition precedent to the holding of such election in incorporated cities.—Burris v. Brock, 79 S. E. 193.

There is no provision in the Constitution requiring a petition of freeholders as a condition precedent to an election on the question of issuing bonds of a school district.—Id.

Act Feb. 19, 1913 (28 St. at Large, p. 355), authorizing the trustees of Anderson school district to hold an election on the question of issuing bonds and not requiring a petition of freeholders as a condition precedent, is inconsistent with and impliedly repeals Civ. Code 1912, § 1743, requiring such a petition.—Id.

No law, constitutional or statutory, requires more than one voting place for an election such as is provided by Act Feb. 19, 1913 (28 St. at Large, p. 355), authorizing the trustees of a school district to hold an election on the question of issuing bonds.—Id.

§ 103 (Ga.) Where a school district tax collection had been held pursuant to Civ. Code 1910, § 1535, which was enacted pursuant to Const., art. 8, § 4 (Civ. Code 1910, § 6579), and the requisite two-thirds vote obtained, the ordinary should declare the result, and thereafter a tax will be levied as provided for by Civ. Code 1910, § 1537.—Connally v. Morrison, 79 S. E. 119.

Where the law for levying a school tax for supplementing the funds in a school district has been put into effect by an election in a district, as provided for by Civ. Code 1910, § 1535, it will continue until changed by law.—Id.

Where the law for levying a school tax for supplementing the funds in a school district has been put in effect as provided by Civ. Code 1910, § 1535, a subsequent election under section 1536, at which 60 votes favor local taxation and 84 opposed it, did not repeal the law in so far as it related to that district, and an application to enjoin the tax levy was properly refused.—Id.

§ 33 (Ga.App.) Under the express provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 5521, the statutory right of set-off is restricted to demands or claims of a similar nature, and a claim arising ex contractu cannot be set off against one arising ex delicto.—McArthur v. Wilson, 79 S. E. 374.

A debt claimed by defendant against plaintiff cannot be set up as a defense in trover to recover possession of personal property.—Id.

§ 44 (Ga.App.) In an action by a partnership for the price of partnership property sold by one partner, defendant could not plead as a defense a set-off based on a contract made with one partner solely in his individual capacity.—F. T. Hardy & Co. v. Jones Bros., 79 S. E. 246.

II. CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

§ 28 (N.C.) A stipulation in an agreement to convey land in consideration of marriage, that plaintiff should be good and kind to defendant's daughter, held not to render the agreement indefinite, uncertain, or unenforceable.—Winslow v. White, 79 S. E. 258.

§ 44 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4634, specific performance of a parol contract as to land will not be decreed on account of partial payment, unless such partial payment is accompanied with possession of the land by the party making it, or there be possession of the land with valuable improvements.—Hall v. Edwards, 79 S. E. 852.

§ 53 (Va.) Specific performance of a contract for the sale of realty will not be denied on the ground that the agent whom plaintiff had engaged to sell the property had wrongfully acted as agent for both parties, where the agent merely transmitted complainant's offer to defendant.—Croghan v. Worthington Hardware Co., 79 S. E. 1039.

§ 59 (N.C.) A stipulation in an agreement to convey land in consideration of marriage, that plaintiff should be good and kind to defendant's daughter, held not to constitute a condition precedent covering the entire period of married life, preventing enforcement, but was only a condition subsequent.—Winalow v. White, 79 S. E. 258.

§ 65 (Va.) Where no fraud or imposition was practiced on a vendor of land and the contract was fairly entered into, the purchaser is entitled to specific performance.—Croghan v. Worthington Hardware Co., 79 S. E. 1039.

§ 73 (Ga.) Specific performance of a contract for personal services which are material and mechanical in character will not ordinarily be enforced; the rule stated in Civ. Code 1910, § 4633, that specific performance will be decreed whenever the damages recoverable at law will not be adequate, not being without exception.—Greer v. Pope, 79 S. E. 846.

The specific performance of contracts for personal services involving the exercise of skill, judgment, and discretion, continuous in their character, and running for 99 years, will not be enforced.—Id.

IV. PROCEEDINGS AND RELIEF.

§ 121 (Ga.) To entitle a plaintiff to specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of land, the contract must be established to a reasonable certainty.—Coffey v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 568.

Evidence, in an action for specific performance, held insufficient to show that payments were made as alleged, or that valuable improvements were erected with reference to the alleged contract.—Id.

§ 121 (Va.) Evidence, in specific performance of an agreement to sell complainant a tract containing an orchard, held to show that the option to purchase contemplated that complainant pay the costs of labor performed on the orchard while the option was in force, and that he never offered to pay such costs and had no intention of doing so.—Triplett v. Gudebrod, 79 S. E. 1045.

§ 123 (Ga.) Where, in an action on a covenant in a 99-year lease of a portion of a telephone system, which bound the lessees to furnish free service to the lessors, there was evidence that the lessees had sold the entire system and placed it beyond their power to carry out the covenant, and that those purchasing from them refused to do so, the question whether the lessees were liable in damages in lieu of specific performance was for the jury.—Greer v. Pope, 79 S. E. 846.

§ 128 (Va.) Where complainant was not entitled to specific performance, and could obtain adequate relief at law, equity would not retain jurisdiction to award the value of complainant's improvements, less the rental value of the land.—Branham v. Artrip, 79 S. E. 390.

Code 1904, § 2760, authorizing allowance for improvements in ejectment and in cases in which there is a decree or judgment against a defendant for land, held inapplicable to a suit for specific performance, where the complainant seeking to take advantage of the section was unsuccessful.—Id.

II. GOVERNMENT AND OFFICERS.

§ 34 (W.Va.) A summons for a witness before a joint legislative committee, ordered by the unanimous action of such committee and signed by the chairman of the committee from either house, pursuant to Code 1906, c. 12, § 7, is not invalid, though such chairman be also the chairman selected by the joint committee.—Sullivan v. Hill, 79 S. E. 670.

§ 40 (W.Va.) Where a witness summoned before a joint legislative committee refuses to testify as to a subject within the range of legitimate legislative inquiry, his obedience may be enforced by attachment, fine, or imprisonment, as provided by Code 1906, c. 12, § 7.—Sullivan v. Hill, 79 S. E. 670.

Code 1906, c. 12, § 7, authorizing either house of the Legislature or a committee thereof to enforce obedience to its process, held constitutional.—Id.

III. PROPERTY, CONTRACTS, AND LIABILITIES.

§ 87 (Va.) As to property held by public corporations for public purposes the power of the Legislature is supreme, but, while it may prohibit such corporations from accepting property as trustees under a private grant, yet when the trust has once been accepted it cannot divert it to purposes other than that of the trust.—General Board of State Hospitals for the Insane v. Robertson, 79 S. E. 1064.

IV. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, AND SECURITIES.

§ 115 (S.C.) The refunding of a valid existing debt does not increase the debt of the state, and hence does not require submission to the voters under Const., art. 10, § 11.—State v. Blease, 79 S. E. 247.

Act Feb. 10, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 922), repealing as to two certain bonds Act Feb. 25, 1896 (22 St. at Large, p. 183), limiting the time for refunding bonds, held not to increase the indebtedness of the state contrary to Const. art. 10, § 11.—Id.

§ 144 (S.C.) The liability of a state upon negotiable paper issued by competent authority is the same as that which attaches to private individuals under like circumstances.—State v. Blease, 79 S. E. 247.

Holders of negotiable paper issued by the state, in the absence of allegations to the contrary, are presumed to be innocent purchasers for value before maturity, and without notice of any objection to its validity.—Id.

When authority to issue negotiable paper in the name of the state exists, neither irregularities nor frauds on the part of the officers or agents of the state intrusted with the exercise of such authority will affect it in the hands of innocent purchasers for value before maturity and without notice.—Id.

The state is estopped to deny recitals on the face of negotiable paper in the hands of innocent purchasers for value before maturity and without notice.—Id.

§ 158 (S.C.) Provision of section 15 of the joint resolution of March 22, 1878 (16 St. at Large, p. 672), ratifying and validating bonds and certificates of stock issued after the expiration of the terms of office of the officers executing them, held valid.—State v. Blease, 79 S. E. 247.

§ 164 (S.C.) Refunding of bonds and stocks of the state held not to be enjoined on the ground of irregularities in their issuance, where it was not alleged that the holders were not innocent purchasers, that the securities did not rest upon valid debts of the state, or that they were fraudulent or void in their inception.—State v. Blease, 79 S. E. 247.

§ 165 (S.C.) Where the action of the state treasurer and treasurer of the sinking fund commission in publishing a notice to holders of state bonds to present them for payment was authorized by the commission, it was unnecessary that a subsequent attempted ratification thereof was valid.—State v. Blease, 79 S. E. 247.

Sinking fund commission in carrying out the provisions of Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 738), relative to issuing bonds and stocks and redeeming others held not subject to the control of the court as to matters within its discretion.—Id.

Resolution of sinking fund commission pursuant to Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 738), adopted at a meeting at which it was claimed there was no quorum present, held to involve matters still subject to its orders, and hence to have been ratified by the commission's subsequent refusal to revoke it.—Id.

Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 738), relative to refunding bonds and stocks issued under Acts Dec. 22, 1892, and Dec. 22, 1893 (21 St. at Large, pp. 24, 420), held not to authorize the refunding of outstanding Green Consols, issued under the Act Dec. 22, 1873 (15 St. at Large, p. 518), and subsequent acts.—Id.

Under Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 738), authorizing the redemption of bonds and stocks issued under Act Dec. 22, 1892 (21 St. at Large, p. 24), bonds and stocks issued under Act Dec. 22, 1893 (21 St. at Large, p. 420), amending and supplementing the act of 1892, held also redeemable.—Id.

Under Act Dec. 22, 1892 (21 St. at Large, p. 24), bonds and stocks issued thereunder held redeemable 20 years from January 1, 1893, the date borne by them, although some were not actually issued until later.—Id.

Under Act Dec. 22, 1892 (21 St. at Large, p. 24), sinking fund commission held not required to hold bonds issued thereunder, when called for payment, as assets of the sinking fund, but to cancel them.—Id.

VI. ACTIONS.

§ 191 (Va.) A suit against a state hospital for the insane in its public governmental capacity is a suit against the state which cannot be maintained by an individual unless the state waives its immunity and submits itself to the jurisdiction of the courts.—General Board of State Hospitals for the Insane v. Robertson, 79 S. E. 1064.

A state hospital for the insane which in its private capacity has accepted a testamentary trust stands upon the same footing with respect to it as any other trustee and is suable by a beneficiary.—Id.

I. ENACTMENT, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL.

§ 48 (N.C.) Pub. Loc. Laws 1911, c. 761, amending the General Mechanics' Lien Law, but providing that it shall apply only in certain counties, shall not apply in Union and Stanley counties, and shall not apply where material is furnished by any person, firm, or corporation outside of Union county, held contradictory, self-destructive, and void.—Orinoco Supply Co. v. Masonic & Eastern Star Home, 79 S. E. 964.

II. GENERAL AND SPECIAL OR LOCAL LAWS.

§ 76 (S.C.) Const. art. 3, § 34, subd. 11, providing that no special law shall be enacted where a general law could be made to apply, does not render invalid an act enlarging a school district and authorizing the trustees to hold an election on the question of issuing bonds.—Burris v. Brock, 79 S. E. 193.

§ 76 (W.Va.) Acts 1907, c. 74 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 42, §§ 18, 20), amending and re-enacting Code 1906, c. 42, §§ 18, 20, and providing for an alternative method of condemning land or easements by pipe line companies, held not violative of Const. art. 6, § 39 (Code 1906, p. lxii), prohibiting the passage of a special act where a general law would be proper and applicable.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 3.

§ 90 (S.C.) Act Feb. 19, 1913 (28 St. at Large, p. 355), amending Act Jan. 5, 1895 (21 St. at Large, p. 921), by enlarging the Anderson school district, does not violate Const. art. 3, § 34, subd. 5, prohibiting the incorporating of school districts by special law, as such law does not incorporate a district but only amends a previous statute of incorporation.—Burris v. Brock, 79 S. E. 193.

III. SUBJECTS AND TITLES OF ACTS.

§ 107 (S.C.) Act Feb. 19, 1913 (28 St. at Large, p. 355), does not violate Const. art. 3, § 17, requiring that every act shall relate to but one subject and that to be expressed in the title.—Burris v. Brock, 79 S. E. 193.

§ 112 (W.Va.) Acts 1907, c. 74 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 42, §§ 18, 20), amending and re-enacting Code 1906, c. 42, §§ 18, 20, and providing for an alternative method of condemning land or easements by pipe line companies, held not violative of Const. art. 6, § 30 (Code 1906, p. lx), providing that no act shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title.—Carnegie Natural Gas Co. v. Swiger, 79 S. E. 3.

§ 119 (S.C.) Provision of Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large, p. 738), for issuance of bonds and stocks for the purpose of calling in and paying other bonds and stocks, held germane to the subject expressed in the title, and not to violate Const. art. 3, § 17.—State v. Blease, 79 S. E. 247.

Act Feb. 17, 1912 (27 St. at Large p. 738), so far as it authorizes the redemption thereunder of bonds and stocks known as Brown Consols, in addition to those known as Redemption Brown Consols, held to violate Const. art. 3, § 17, as relating to a subject not expressed in its title.—Id.

Provision of section 15 of the joint resolution of March 22, 1878 (16 St. at Large, p. 672), validating certain bonds and stocks issued after the expiration of the terms of office of the officers executing them, held germane to the title, and not to violate Const. 1868, art. 2, § 20, requiring the subject of acts to be expressed in their title.—Id.

Provisions of Act Dec. 24, 1879 (17 St. at Large, p. 110), amending and extending the provisions of Act Dec. 20, 1878 (16 St. at Large, p. 704), for refunding obligations issued after January 1, 1866, held not to relate to a subject not expressed in the title, contrary to Const. 1868, art. 2, § 20.—Id.

§ 126 (S.C.) While Const. art. 3, § 17, providing that every act shall relate to but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, is very liberally construed, yet, when the title of an act specifically limits its object, the court must limit the operation of the act to the subject so expressed in the title.—State v. Blease, 79 S. E. 247.

V. REPEAL, SUSPENSION, EXPIRATION, AND REVIVAL.

§ 159 (N.C.) Where two statutes are in conflict and cannot reasonably be reconciled, the later one repeals the one of earlier date to the extent of the repugnance.—Board of Com'rs of Vance County v. Town of Henderson, 79 S. E. 442.

VI. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) General Rules of Construction.

§ 181 (N.C.) If a statute is ambiguous so as to be fairly susceptible of more than one interpretation, then the courts may exercise the power of construing its language so as to give effect to the intention of the Legislature, but such intention is to be ascertained by reasonable construction of the act and not founded on mere arbitrary conjecture.—Board of Com'rs of Vance County v. Town of Henderson, 79 S. E. 442.

§ 185 (N.C.) The Legislature is presumed to know the existing law including the judicial construction given to existing statutes, and to legislate with reference thereto.—Raeferd Lumber Co. v. Rockfish Trading Co., 79 S. E. 627.

§ 190 (N.C.) Where the language of a statute is free from ambiguity and conveys a definite and sensible meaning, the courts should not hesitate to give it a literal interpretation merely because they may question the wisdom or expediency of the enactment.—Board of Com'rs of Vance County v. Town of Henderson, 79 S. E. 442.

§ 190 (N.C.) It is only when the terms of a statute give rise to ambiguity, or the grammatical construction is doubtful, that courts can exercise the power of controlling the language to give effect to what they suppose to have been the real intention of the Legislature.—Whitford v. North State Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 501.

§ 207 (N.C.) Where the proviso in a statute is directly contrary to the purview of the statute, the proviso is good and not the purview, because the proviso speaks the later intention of the Legislature.—Orinoco Supply Co. v. Masonic & Eastern Star Home, 79 S. E. 964.

§ 219 (N.C.) It being by statute the duty of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction to construe the school law, his construction thereof, though not binding on the courts, is entitled to high consideration.—Board of Graded School Com'rs of City of Winston v. Board of Education of Forsyth County, 79 S. E. 886.

§ 225 (N.C.) Statutes which relate to the same subject should be construed together.—Powell v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 872.

(B) Particular Classes of Statutes.

§ 241 (S.C.) In a criminal prosecution there should be a strict construction of the law in favor of the defendant, but it should not be one which would thwart the clear intention of the lawmakers as gathered from a reasonable interpretation of the statute.—City of Anderson v. Fant, 79 S. E. 641.

In a criminal prosecution under a statute it must appear not only that the accused is within the letter of the law but that he is within its spirit.—Id.

§ 246 (N.C.) A special statute, entirely local in its nature in abrogation of the general law of the state, should be strictly construed.—Orinoco Supply Co. v. Masonic & Eastern Star Home, 79 S. E. 964.

II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

§ 87 (N.C.) Where plaintiff drove his horse, which showed signs of fright, close to an approaching street car, he cannot recover for injuries occasioned by the fright of the horse; the company being under no obligation to stop its car, which was being operated with only the usual noise.—Barnes v. North Carolina Public Service Co., 79 S. E. 881.

§ 98 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 2781, plaintiff could not recover against a street railroad company for injuries sustained which were caused by his own negligence, whether his negligence was prior or subsequent to the negligence of the railroad company.—Collum v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 475.

§ 113 (Ga.App.) In an action for the death from being struck by a street car run at an excessive speed, it was error to admit evidence that other motormen had run cars at excessive speed at the same place and on one occasion had nearly run over some children.—Rome Ry. & Light Co. v. Lansdell, 79 S. E. 1131.

§ 117 (Ga.) In an action to recover for death of plaintiff's husband by being struck by a street car, the questions of defendant's negligence and of the diligence of plaintiff's husband in avoiding the consequence thereof by ordinary care were for the jury.—Howard v. Savannah Electric Co., 79 S. E. 112.

Where a petition alleged that plaintiff's husband looked in the direction from which a car was coming before attempting to cross the tracks, but that, owing to the unlawful speed at which the car was running, it struck him, and this allegation was denied by the answer, and the evidence did not show that deceased saw the car or heard the gong before being struck, it was error to direct a verdict for defendant.—Id.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian, struck by a street car, whether he exercised ordinary care, or to what extent he contributed to his injury by his neglect, were questions for the jury.—Id.

§ 118 (Ga.) An instruction that the precise thing that every man is bound to do before stepping on a railroad track, including those of street railroads, is that which every prudent man would do under like circumstances, and if every prudent man would look and listen, so must every one else, or take the consequences so far as they may have been avoided by that means, was proper.—Collum v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 475.

An instruction held not objectionable for failure to require that plaintiff's negligence must have been subsequent to that of defendant.—Id.

Belle Isle, 79 S. E. 357.

§ 15 (Ga.App.) Where defendant hired an automobile on Sunday for use on that day and the contract was void under Pen. Code 1910, § 416, and where he used the car as intended, his subsequent promise, made on a secular day without a new consideration, to pay for the hire did not render the contract enforceable.—Jones v. ### V. LEVY AND ASSESSMENT.

(B) Assessors and Proceedings for Assessment.

§ 319 (Va.) One whose property is liable to assessment for taxes may not evade payment for errors, omissions, or irregularities in the assessment thereof which do not prejudice his rights.—Bridgewater Mfg. Co. v. Funkhouser, 79 S. E. 1074.

(D) Mode of Assessment of Corporate Stock, Property, or Receipts.

§ 378 (Va.) Under Code 1904, p. 2195, § 8, schedule C, providing for the taxation of the capital of corporations, etc., capital employed in the business of a miller or other manufacturer is subject to taxation.—Bridgewater Mfg. Co. v. Funkhouser, 79 S. E. 1074.

The word "capital," as used in Code 1904, p. 2195, § 8, schedule C, subsecs. 3, 4, providing for the taxation of the capital of corporations, held to mean money and other property adventured in the business, whether owned by the company or borrowed, and not the original amount paid in by the shareholders on their purchase of stock.—Id.

(G) Review, Correction, or Setting Aside of Assessment.

§ 466 (Va.) Code 1904, § 437a, as amended by Acts 1910, c. 39, providing for separate assessment of mineral lands and for a correction by the State Corporation Commission, held to furnish the exclusive procedure for the correction of such assessments, and hence that under Code 1904, §§ 567, 568, 573, providing for the review of assessments generally and for application therefor by the auditor of public accounts, the auditor could not apply for a correction of a mineral land assessment.—Grief v. Kegley, 79 S. E. 1062.

VIII. COLLECTION AND ENFORCEMENT AGAINST PERSONS OR PERSONAL PROPERTY.

(A) Collectors and Proceedings for Collection in General.

§ 545 (Ga.) Civ. Code 1910, § 1187, authorizing the Comptroller General to issue execution against tax collectors and their sureties on their bonds, held invalid.—Gaulden v. Wright, 79 S. E. 1125.

§ 569 (Ga.) It is error not to enjoin the enforcement of an execution under Civ. Code 1910, § 1187, where the unconstitutionality of the law was urged as a basis for the injunction.—Gaulden v. Wright, 79 S. E. 1125.

X. REDEMPTION FROM TAX SALE.

§ 707 (N.C.) A tax deed on sale of land for taxes for the year 1897 held void where no affidavit was filed showing service of notice on the owner of the land and persons in possession.—McNair v. Boyd, 79 S. E. 966.

XI. TAX TITLES.

(A) Title and Rights of Purchaser at Tax Sale.

§ 730 (N.C.) Under the statute providing for the sale of land for nonpayment of taxes of 1897, the county could not become an absolute purchaser, but could only foreclose the certificate of purchase or deed.—McNair v. Boyd, 79 S. E. 966.

§ 742 (N.C.) Under the statute providing for the sale of land for nonpayment of taxes of 1897, the county could not become an absolute purchaser, but could only foreclose the certificate of purchase or deed, and the county's assignee acquired no better right.—McNair v. Boyd, 79 S. E. 966.

(B) Tax Deeds.

§ 746 (N.C.) A tax deed could be executed by a sheriff after his term expired to convey land which he sold for taxes during his term.—McNair v. Boyd, 79 S. E. 966.

§ 788 (N.C.) The rule that the recitals in tax deed are evidence, either conclusive or presumptive, does not apply when the tax deed itself is attacked for noncompliance with conditions precedent with reference to notice.—McNair v. Boyd, 79 S. E. 966.

(C) Actions to Confirm or Try Title.

§ 805 (N.C.) The statute of limitations cannot avail a defendant, in an action to cancel a tax deed as a cloud on title of plaintiffs who were in possession.—McNair v. Boyd, 79 S. E. 966.

TAX DEEDS.

TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

See Specific Performance, § 123; Trial, § 241.

I. ESTABLISHMENT, CONSTRUCTION, AND MAINTENANCE.

§ 16 (Ga.) A covenant in a 99-year lease of a portion of a telephone system, which bound the lessees, their heirs and assigns, to give free service to the lessors over all their lines, held not binding upon a purchaser from the lessees.—Greer v. Pope, 79 S. E. 846.

Evidence, in an action on a covenant for free service which was contained in a 99-year lease of a portion of a telephone system, held to authorize submission to the jury whether a corporation formed by the covenantors assumed or became bound by the covenant.—Id.

II. REGULATION AND OPERATION.

§ 28 (N.C.) Telegraph and telephone companies hold their charters subject to the obligation to render service at uniform and reasonable rates without discrimination, and may not make or continue a contract which renders them unable to perform those duties.—Woodley v. Carolina Telephone & Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 598.

A telephone company cannot, by waiver of the provisions of its contract, put itself in a position which will prevent a proper performance of its statutory duties and the providing of service at reasonable rates without discrimination.—Id.

§ 33 (N.C.) Telegraph and telephone companies may make such just and reasonable rules and regulations as are required for the conduct of their business, including a rule requiring the payment of established rates monthly in advance.—Woodley v. Carolina Telephone & Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 598.

The granting of a preliminary injunction to restrain the severing of telephone connection with a subscriber, who alone refused to obey company's rule requiring payment in advance, held to be erroneous.—Id.

Where a telephone subscriber struck out from the form of contract the provision requiring payment in advance, such erasure left the matter undetermined, and subject to future regulation by the company.—Id.

An oral agreement that a telephone subscriber should pay at the end of the month instead of in advance, which was indefinite as to time, would be determinable at the will of either party upon the giving of reasonable notice.—Id.

Where a written contract for telephone service provided that it should continue for one year, and thereafter until terminated by the company at its option, the company could terminate an oral agreement, supplementary of the written subscription, and which permitted the subscriber to pay at the end of each month instead of in advance.—Id.

An ordinance permitting a telephone company to require its subscribers to give a bond to secure the payment of the first year's rental was manifestly intended to secure the cost of installing the service, and does not prevent the company from requiring its subscribers to pay their rentals monthly in advance.—Id.

Where a telephone company temporarily permitted its subscribers to pay at the end of the month instead of in advance, as their contracts required, it did not thereby waive its right to require the payment in advance.—Id.

Where a telephone subscriber made a tender for a few days' service in advance, while at the same time insisting that he had a right to pay at the end of the month, the tender was not sufficient to prevent the removal of the telephone by the company.—Id.

§ 37 (N.C.) When a telegram is received by an agent of a telegraph company after office hours, it is his duty to make reasonable efforts to deliver it, and if he cannot do so he must endeavor to notify the sender of its non-delivery.—Griswold v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 273.

§ 38 (N.C.) A message announcing a death and urging the addressee to come gives the telegraph company notice that it is of great importance and that mental anguish will probably result from delay in transmitting it.—Ellison v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 277; Harrison v. Same, Id. 281.

Where the agent did not ask for prepayment, the right to prepayment was waived and cannot be urged as a defense to an action for delay in delivery of the message.—Id.

Where the agent received a message and undertook to transmit it, the company cannot defend an action for delay in delivery on the ground that it was received by the agent after regular office hours.—Id.

It is the duty of a telegraph agent, when he finds that he cannot deliver a message, to notify the sender at once so that an attempt may be made to transmit it in some other way.—Id.

It is no defense, to an action for delay in transmitting a message, that the agent was also the agent of the railroad company and was busy with his railroad duties.—Id.

§ 45 (Ga.App.) Failure of a telephone company to exercise ordinary care to promptly furnish a subscriber with telephone connection renders it liable for damages proximately resulting.—Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Glawson, 79 S. E. 488.

Where a telephone company provides a delicate mechanism of the most approved kind to operate a bell to awaken the night operator, and exercises ordinary care to keep same in order, and the mechanism gets out of order, the company is not liable for damages resulting from the failure of a subscriber to secure telephonic connection.—Id.

§ 54 (Ga.App.) Where a telegraph blank provided for written notice of any claim for damages, evidence that within a week after the message was filed the sender presented his claim orally to the operator with whom he filed the message, and the operator, without requiring that the claim should be made in writing, took up the matter of adjustment with the superintendent, showed a waiver of the condition that the claim should be in writing.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Fitts, 79 S. E. 156.

Though an agent of a telegraph company is not bound to recognize an oral demand, if he does so, making no objection on the ground that it is not in writing, it is a waiver of the written demand.—Id.

Where, within 60 days after filing a telegram, the sender presented to the company's agent, with whom the message was filed, an oral claim for damages, and from the action of the company a waiver of a written demand must be implied, it was not restored to its original right to insist on the written claim because, after 60 days, the sender's attorney transmitted a claim in writing, setting forth the specific damages claimed.—Id.

§ 66 (Ga.App.) In an action against a telephone company for damages from negligent failure to give a subscriber telephonic connection, the burden is on plaintiff to prove negligence.—Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Glawson, 79 S. E. 488.

§ 66 (N.C.) In an action against a telegraph company for mental anguish caused by delay in the delivery of a message notifying the plaintiff of the death of her foster mother, evidence held sufficient to warrant the jury in finding the company negligent, and that plaintiff was thereby prevented from taking an earlier train.—Ellison v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 277; Harrison v. Same, Id. 281.

After the receipt by a telegraph company of a message for transmission is shown, there is a presumption of negligence from a delay in transmitting it extending from 5:30 p. m. until noon the next day.—Id.

Evidence of an arrangement whereby plaintiff was to be notified if her foster mother's condition became worse held admissible, in an action for delay in delivering a message announcing her death, to show that the plaintiff would have taken an earlier train but for the delay.—Id.

§ 73 (N.C.) In an action for mental suffering caused by delay in the delivery of a message announcing a death, it is proper to submit the question of damages for such suffering to the jury, if there is evidence of actual mental suffering, even though the relationship between the parties was not such that the law would presume mental suffering.—Ellison v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 277; Harrison v. Same, Id. 281.

Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether a telegraph agent accepted a message unconditionally, that question is for the jury in the trial court.—Id.

§ 78 (Ga.App.) In an action for the statutory penalty for failure to deliver a telegram, as provided by Civ. Code 1910, § 2812, an answer by defendant stating that, for want of sufficient information, he can neither admit nor deny allegations of the petition that the telegram was received by defendant on a certain date at a certain place and that the required tolls were paid to defendant, is an admission of such allegations; these being matters of which the defendant telegraph company is chargeable with knowledge.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Calhoun, 79 S. E. 370.

Where, in an action for the statutory penalty prescribed by Civ. Code 1910, § 2812, for failure to deliver a telegram, the undisputed evidence showed defendant's acceptance of the telegram, failure to deliver same, and all other material allegations of the petition, the court properly directed a verdict for plaintiff.—Id.

TENANCY IN COMMON.

See Cancellation of Instruments, § 59; Partition, §§ 14, 48.

I. CREATION AND EXISTENCE.

§ 8 (Va.) If the land is owned by joint tenants, a conveyance by less than all will not effect a severance; but the grantee, if he is a stranger, takes as tenant in common with the others.—Virginia Coal & Iron Co. v. Hylton, 79 S. E. 387.

II. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF COTENANTS.

§ 15 (N.C.) A tenant in common may oust the others, and a tenant who is excluded from possession or participation in the rents and profits for 20 years loses his right to the land by adverse possession.—McKeel v. Holloman, 79 S. E. 445.

§ 15 (Va.) Where a stranger to the title takes a conveyance of the whole estate in a tract from a tenant in common, and enters into exclusive possession, claiming title to the whole, such conveyance and possession is an ouster, on which the grantee may base a claim of adverse possession.—Virginia Coal & Iron Co. v. Hylton, 79 S. E. 337.

While the entry and possession of a tenant in common is the entry and possession of all until some notorious act of ouster, yet a tenant in common may enter adversely and claim in severalty, and if he does so the statute of limitations will run in his favor against his cotenants.—Id.

Where, after parol partition, a part of the common property was conveyed by warranty deed to one of the cotenants, and he and his successors in interest entered under the deed claiming the fee, and continued in possession, and paid taxes as the fee-simple owners for 30 years or more, they acquired title to the land and subjacent minerals by adverse possession as against cotenants not bound by the partition.—Id.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF COTENANTS AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

§ 44 (Va.) A joint tenant may transfer his undivided share in land.—Virginia Coal & Iron Co. v. Hylton, 79 S. E. 337.

The deed of a joint tenant of his interest is not void, but, under Code 1904, § 2419, is effectual to pass the interest conveyed, making the grantee a tenant in common with the grantor's cotenants.—Id.

§ 45 (Va.) A joint tenant may not convey any of the property by metes and bounds or the minerals and reserve the surface as against his co-owners.—Virginia Coal & Iron Co. v. Hylton, 79 S. E. 337.

§ 49 (W.Va.) While an oil and gas lease executed by one or more of several cotenants is not binding on the others, it is valid between the parties thereto, and binding on the lessor's interest, even while the premises remain undivided.—Freeman v. Egnor, 79 S. E. 824.

Baird*, 79 S. E. 738.

§ 9 (Ga.) Where notice to plaintiff of the taking of depositions was given on the 19th, and the taking was set for the 23d of the same month, there was no compliance with Civ. Code 1910, § 5910, requiring five days' notice.—Bank of Lavonia v. Bush, 79 S. E. 459.

I. ACTS CONSTITUTING TRESPASS AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 7 (N.C.) The entry by plaintiff, armed with a shotgun, and killing plaintiff's dog, chained to a stake near the porch, in the presence of plaintiff's wife, and under her protest, was not only a trespass, but a forcible trespass.—Beasley v. Byrum, 79 S. E. 270.

II. ACTIONS.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 30 (N.C.) Where P. conveyed the timber on certain land in controversy to a planing mill company, which removed it, if trespass was established against the company in removing the timber, P. was also liable therefor.—Locklear v. Paul, 79 S. E. 617.

III. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

§ 76 (Ga.App.) To constitute the crime of trespass the act must have been committed willfully and intentionally.—Hayes v. State, 79 S. E. 761.

That a guardian had no authority to rent land of the ward without an order of court, as provided by Civ. Code 1910, § 3067, was immaterial on the question of the criminal responsibility of the tenant as for a trespass.—Id.

§ 84 (Ga.App.) A tenant who in good faith claims possession of land under a bona fide claimant of title and right of possession cannot be convicted of trespass.—Hayes v. State, 79 S. E. 761.

§ 88 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for trespass, any evidence tending to show that defendant's possession either originated or was continued in good faith is relevant and competent.—Hayes v. State, 79 S. E. 761.

TRIAL.

See Adverse Possession, § 115; Agriculture; Appeal and Error, §§ 170-270, 848, 928, 930, 969, 994-1024, 1038, 1062, 1066, 1068, 1178; Assault and Battery, § 95; Bills and Notes, § 537; Burglary, § 47; Carriers, §§ 36, 320, 347, 848; Continuance; Contracts, § 353; Corporations, § 90; Costs; Covenants, § 134, 135; Criminal Law, §§ 622-895, 1152, 1153, 1158-1160, 1166½, 1171-1174; Customs and Usages, § 21; Damages, § 215; Deeds, § 66; Drains, § 14; Eminent Domain, §§ 66, 222, 224; Execution, §§ 194-210, 425; False Imprisonment, § 39; Forgery, § 48; Gaming, § 71; Homicide, §§ 282-310, 340; Husband and Wife, § 209; Insurance, §§ 668-670; Intoxicating Liquors, § 238; Jury; Landlord and Tenant, § 270; Larceny, § 3; Master and Servant, §§ 285-297; Municipal Corporations, § 822; Negligence, §§ 136, 141; New Trial; Nuisance, § 54; Perjury, § 37; Principal and Agent, § 193; Railroads, §§ 350, 400, 448, 485; Reference; Sales, §§ 176, 363, 364, 398, 445; Specific Performance, § 123; Street Railroads, §§ 117, 118; Telegraphs and Telephones, §§ 16, 73, 78; Venue; Waters and Water Courses, § 126; Wills, § 324.

III. COURSE AND CONDUCT OF TRIAL IN GENERAL.

§ 25 (Ga.App.) An amended answer which admitted the bailment alleged and the amount of damages, and thus gave plaintiff a prima facie right to recover, held to entitle defendant to open and close, where the amendment was filed before any evidence was introduced by plaintiff.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bana, 79 S. E. 947.

IV. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

(A) Introduction, Offer, and Admission of Evidence in General.

§ 48 (W.Va.) That impeaching evidence was on a collateral matter, and therefore not good as such evidence, did not render its admission error, where it tended to support some of the main issues.—Greer v. Arrington, 79 S. E. 720.

§ 58 (N.C.) Where improper evidence is admitted, the court should withdraw it from the jury.—Cooper v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 418.

(C) Objections, Motions to Strike Out, and Exceptions.

§ 33 (Ga.) An objection merely that testimony was incompetent, without stating the reason for such incompetency, held too general.—Dale v. Christian, 79 S. E. 1127.

§ 85 (Ga.) Where a part of the testimony objected to in bulk was competent and material to the issues, the objection was properly overruled, though another part may have been incompetent.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Anchors, 79 S. E. 158.

§ 85 (Ga.App.) Where a part of a witness' testimony was clearly admissible, an objection to it in solido was properly overruled.—Great Southern Accident & Fidelity Co. v. Guthrie, 79 S. E. 162.

§ 85 (Ga.App.) An objection to a witness' testimony as a whole was properly overruled, where only a part of his testimony was subject to the objection made.—Beidsville & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 79 S. E. 187.

§ 89 (W.Va.) In a suit under the civil damage act it is not error to deny defendant's motion to exclude plaintiff's evidence tending in an appreciable degree to support the declaration.—Greer v. Arrington, 79 S. E. 720.

V. ARGUMENTS AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

§ 123 (N.C.) Where, in an action for alienation of affections, defendant's conduct with plaintiff's wife tended to show improper relations, defendant's failure to testify was a subject of comment by counsel, and might be considered by the jury on the question of improper relations.—Powell v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 872.

VI. TAKING CASE OR QUESTION FROM JURY.

(A) Questions of Law or of Fact in General.

§ 136 (Ga.App.) Whether a known right, on which a party had a right to insist, was waived, is a question of fact for the jury.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Fitta, 79 S. E. 156.

§ 139 (Ga.App.) A verdict should not be directed where there is any issue of fact or proved facts which, viewed from any possible legal point of view, will sustain any other finding than that directed.—McDuffie v. Lummus Cotton Gin Co., 79 S. E. 493.

§ 139 (N.C.) A motion for nonsuit will be denied where there is evidence which, if believed by the jury, is sufficient foundation for a verdict for the plaintiff.—Ellison v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 277; Harrison v. Same, Id. 281.

§ 139 (S.C.) If there is any competent evidence at all tending to sustain the allegations of the complaint, the case should be submitted to the jury, and a nonsuit denied.—Bennett v. Southern Ry.-Carolina Division, 79 S. E. 710.

§ 139 (S.C.) Where there is any evidence in favor of plaintiff, its weight and sufficiency should be left to the jury.—Smith v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1090.

§ 139 (W.Va.) Where a case does not turn on conflicting oral testimony, the court may properly direct a verdict for the party in whose favor the evidence decidedly preponderates.—Lovett v. West Virginia Central Gas Co., 79 S. E. 1007.

§ 141 (N.C.) Where the testimony of plaintiff's witness as to the amount due was not controverted or denied, and there was no attempt to impeach him, a verdict should have been directed for that amount.—Arey Distilling Co. v. Mutual Aid Banking Co., 79 S. E. 287.

§ 141 (N.C.) Where the evidence is uncontradicted, and only one inference can be drawn therefrom, the judge may direct the jury to find a certain verdict if they believe the evidence, but it is very rare that a verdict can be properly directed when the sole question is the possession of land, and much evidence is offered on each side.—Barfield v. Hill, 79 S. E. 877.

§ 141 (N.C.) Where, in an action on an accepted order, the uncontradicted evidence showed that the order was accepted conditionally, it was error to submit to the jury a question whether the order was unconditional.—Craig & Wilson v. Stewart & Jones, 79 S. E. 1100.

§ 145 (S.C.) In an action for a deposit, in which the bank sought to charge checks, drawn on another account kept by plaintiff, against the deposit sued for, an instruction held erroneous as invading the province of the jury, which withdrew from the jury the issue whether, by the course of dealing, the bank was justified in believing plaintiff's agent was authorized to direct the bank to charge the checks as was done.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 899.

(B) Demurrer to Evidence.

§ 156 (Va.) Where deceased was killed by being thrown from the platform of a dinkey engine, on which he was riding, by the impact of another engine against a car, from which the dinkey had just been uncoupled, but the evidence failed to show whether it was before or after the dinkey was put in motion, it will be assumed on demurrer to the evidence that it was afterwards.—Steele's Adm'r v. Colonial Coal & Coke Co., 79 S. E. 346.

(C) Dismissal or Nonsuit.

§ 165 (Ga.) A motion for nonsuit in an action for land should be denied, where plaintiff's evidence under the most favorable construction makes out a prima facie case.—Henry v. Roberts, 79 S. E. 115.

§ 165 (N.C.) Upon motion for a nonsuit the evidence must be taken in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and with all the inferences which may be reasonably drawn therefrom in his favor.—Lewis v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 79 S. E. 283.

§ 165 (N.C.) In determining a motion for a nonsuit, the evidence, which makes for plaintiff's right to recover, must be taken as true and interpreted in the light most favorable to him.—Brewer v. Wynne, 79 S. E. 629.

§ 165 (N.C.) On motion for nonsuit the court will consider only the evidence most favorable to plaintiff and in the most favorable aspect to him.—Smith v. Cumberland County Agr. Society, 79 S. E. 632.

§ 165 (N.C.) In ruling upon a defendant's motion for a nonsuit or a directed verdict, the court must adopt the evidence of the plaintiff and reject that of the defendant, except in so far as the latter is in the plaintiff's favor.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.

(D) Direction of Verdict.

§ 168 (S.C.) The rules governing nonsuits govern the direction of verdicts.—Smith v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 1099.

VII. INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY.

(A) Province of Court and Jury in General.

§ 191 (Ga.App.) An instruction that plaintiff could not recover if her injuries were not due to certain enumerated acts of the defendant carrier held not erroneous, as assuming that certain acts stated were negligent, when considered in connection with the entire charge.—Savannah Electric Co. v. Lackens, 79 S. E. 53.

§ 191 (N.C.) Where the indorsement of a note by the payee to a bank was expressly denied, it was error for the court to state to the jury that it was proved and not denied that the note went into the hands of the bank before it was due.—Third Nat. Bank of St. Louis v. Eixum, 79 S. E. 498.

§ 191 (S.C.) A charge which assumes a disputed question of fact is improper.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 899.

§ 192 (S.C.) Where, in the trial of title to a lot, defendant set up title by adverse possession, a charge that defendant must have had the lot for 10 full years prior to the commencement of the action in May, 1910, was not a charge on the facts, as it simply stated a fact about which there was no controversy.—McLain v. Allen, 79 S. E. 1.

§ 192 (S.C.) A charge is not improper as a charge on the facts merely because it does not state hypothetically facts which are admitted.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 899.

§ 193 (S.C.) The trial judge may charge the law applicable to any facts proven, and a statement of what facts are admitted or not contested is not a charge on the facts.—Mullaly v. Smyth, 79 S. E. 634.

§ 194 (Ga.) Where defendant denied that a diamond alleged to have been stolen belonged to plaintiff, but claimed that he received it from R., whom he did not produce, an instruction that it should be presumed that R., if present, would not have supported such claim, was objectionable, as charging that the defendant's testimony was weaker than that of R., had he testified in the case.—Brothers v. Horne, 79 S. E. 468.

(B) Necessity and Subject-Matter.

§ 203 (Ga.App.) Where the only defense to a suit upon a note was accord and satisfaction, it was error to charge the jury that the defendant could not recover unless he proved payment of the note, and to omit to instruct as to the defense.—Elrod v. M. C. Kiser & Co., 79 S. E. 375.

§ 203 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 535, it was error, in an action for the value of a hog, where there was much evidence to ownership and value, and defendant relied on estoppel, to only charge the jury to take the case and settle it as between man and man.—Blake v. Smith, 79 S. E. 226.

(C) Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency.

§ 228 (Ga.App.) In an action to recover for injuries to plaintiff's storehouse by change of grade, it was not error in the instructions to refer to the lot as "the property."—City of Americus v. Phillips, 79 S. E. 36.

§ 228 (Ga.App.) An instruction that the damages recoverable for mental pain and suffering is left to the "enlightened consciences of intelligent jurors" held not erroneous in the use of the word "intelligent" instead of "impartial."—City of Rome v. Ford, 79 S. E. 243.

§ 234 (Ga.App.) A trial judge in declaring that the party having the burden of proof has discharged it so that the burden of evidence is shifted to his opponent may properly consider the question as to which party has control of the more precise and conclusive knowledge as to the particular facts.—Hyer v. C. E. Holmes & Co., 79 S. E. 58.

§ 235 (N.C.) Where the evidence was conflicting, instruction to find for plaintiff, if the jury believed the evidence, held improper.—Henry v. Heggie, 79 S. E. 982.

§ 236 (Ga.) An instruction, after charging the language of Civ. Code 1910, § 5732, for determining the credibility of witnesses, that the jury should reconcile all the testimony, if possible, and, if not, give the greater weight to that witness or those witnesses whose testimony seems to be most reasonable and credible, held sufficient.—Collum v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 79 S. E. 475.

§ 236 (Ga.App.) An instruction that the jury could believe the witnesses having the best opportunity of knowing the facts and the least inducement to swear falsely, without qualifying the instruction by the addition of the words "if the witnesses are of equal credibility," is erroneous.—Richter v. Cathy, 79 S. E. 179.

§ 240 (Ga.) A request to instruct should not be argumentative, though based upon a discussion in the opinion of a court of last resort.—Flemister v. Central Georgia Power Co., 79 S. E. 148.

§ 241 (S.C.) In an action for mental anguish caused by the failure to deliver promptly a telegram announcing the death of plaintiff's father, it is not error for the court, in charging the jury, to read Civ. Code 1912, § 3330, allowing a recovery in such cases.—Gossett v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 309.

§ 242 (S.C.) Where the jury were charged that plaintiff could not recover if guilty of negligence in any one or more of the particulars specified in the answer, containing nine specifications of contributory negligence, an instruction that the burden was on defendants to establish every material allegation of the defense of contributory negligence was not misleading.—Huggins v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 79 S. E. 406.

§ 243 (Va.) Where two instructions on the issue of a servant's contributory negligence were irreconcilable, the judgment will be reversed.—Powhatan Lime Co. v. Affeck's Adm'r, 79 S. E. 1054.

(D) Applicability to Pleadings and Evidence.

§ 251 (Ga.App.) In an action for injuries to an automobile driver at a railroad crossing, negligence of the defendant in maintenance of the crossing should be confined by the instructions to the specific act of negligence alleged in the petition.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 251 (Va.) In an action for injuries to a railway mail clerk, instructions requested by the defendant, basing plaintiff's right of recovery upon negligence in suddenly checking the train, held to have been properly refused, where two counts of the declaration did not rely upon that ground of negligence.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

§ 252 (Ga.) Where, in an action on a note, there was no evidence of failure of consideration or of notice to plaintiff at the time it took the note of fraud practiced on the maker by the agents of the payee inducing the execution thereof, it was error to charge on fraud and failure of consideration.—Bank of Lavonia v. Bush, 79 S. E. 459.

§ 252 (Ga.) Where, in trover to recover a stolen diamond, one of the defendants claimed that the diamond introduced in evidence did not belong to plaintiff, but that he had received it from R., and it did not appear that R. was in the county or could by reasonable diligence have been obtained as a witness, it was error to charge that under Civ. Code 1910, § 5749, it should be presumed that R., if produced, would not have supported such claim.—Brothers v. Horne, 79 S. E. 468.

§ 252 (Ga.) Where, in an action for specific performance, plaintiff based her right to recover upon a parol gift, possession under the gift, substantial improvements, and a contract of sale, but there was no evidence as to gift, possession, and improvements, the court in its charge should have confined the jury to the question of a contract of sale.—Coffey v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 568.

§ 252 (Ga.App.) Failure of the court in a personal injury case to instruct on elements of damages pleaded but not proven was not error.—City of Rome v. Ford, 79 S. E. 243.

§ 252 (N.C.) Where a contract for the sale of timber authorized plaintiff to suspend cutting on a decline of the market price so as to render cutting unprofitable, an instruction on the issue whether plaintiff suspended cutting in violation of the agreement, failing to include his right to suspend, was erroneous.—Wilson v. Scarboro, 79 S. E. 811.

§ 252 (N.C.) Where, in an action on an accepted order, the evidence conclusively showed a conditional and not an absolute promise to pay the order, it was error to instruct that plaintiffs would be entitled to recover if defendants "promised to pay it and accepted it."—Craig & Wilson v. Stewart & Jones, 79 S. E. 1100.

§ 252 (Va.) Where an engineer fell into a ditch dug by a contractor on the railroad company's premises and was injured, an instruction that, if the engineer had no right on the premises, then the contractor owed him no duty except not to willfully injure him was properly refused as abstract.—Nesbit v. Webb, 79 S. E. 330.

§ 252 (Va.) A requested instruction, in an action against a county on a contract for the improvement of a highway, that plaintiff is entitled to recover if the work was performed according to the specifications, "as directed by the engineer," was properly modified by striking out the words quoted, where the contract provided that the work should be done in accordance with the specifications, and to the satisfaction of the county and engineer.—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

§ 252 (Va.) A requested instruction which is not supported by the evidence is properly refused.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

§ 252 (W.Va.) In a suit under the civil damage act, it was error to submit instructions on the question of injury to plaintiff's person, where there was no evidence of such injury.—Greer v. Arrington, 79 S. E. 720.

§ 253 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 6084, relative to requests to charge, it was error, in an action for injuries from a crossing accident, to refuse an instruction properly stating the law of contributory negligence, where there was evidence that the accident resulted from the mutual negligence of defendant and plaintiff.—Georgia & F. Ry. v. Newton, 79 S. E. 142.

§ 253 (N.C.) An instruction in garnishment held erroneous for ignoring certain evidence.—Cannon-Torrence Co. v. Marlott, 79 S. E. 1109.

§ 253 (S.C.) In a depositor's action for a balance, an instruction that the bank must prove that the checks charged to the account were signed by the depositor herself held improper as ignoring the issue whether the depositor's agent had authority, real or apparent, to direct that they be so charged, though irregularly signed.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 899.

§ 253 (Va.) An instruction, in an action against a county for balance due on a road construction contract, that if the facts therein stated are true the county is estopped from denying that certain work was not according to contract which disregards evidence that the plaintiff induced the action claimed to constitute an estoppel by fraud, was properly refused.—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

(E) Requests or Prayers.

§ 255 (Ga.) In an action for malicious arrest, failure to instruct on advice of counsel held not error, in the absence of a request therefor.—Hurt v. Barnes, 79 S. E. 775.

§ 255 (Ga.App.) In an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act, failure to instruct that there is no presumption of negligence against a railroad company in such cases is not error in the absence of a request for such an instruction.—Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 932.

§ 256 (Ga.) Where the instructions given fairly presented the issues, failure to give fuller instructions was not error, in the absence of a request therefor.—West v. Locklear, 79 S. E. 855.

§ 256 (Ga.) Where the instructions given in a personal injury case do not state the defense as fully as desired, the defendant should request additional instructions.—Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 79 S. E. 1113.

§ 256 (Ga.App.) In the absence of a request for an instruction as to the burden of proof on a particular point or issue, an instruction as to the burden of proof in the case as a whole is sufficient.—Cook v. Hightower & Co., 79 S. E. 165.

§ 256 (Ga.App.) Where the instructions fairly presented the law, a party desiring more specific instructions upon particular features of the case should have made appropriate requests therefor.—Rochelle Gin & Cotton Co. v. Fisher, 79 S. E. 584.

§ 256 (Ga.App.) Where the instructions substantially covered the issues, defendant could not complain of failure to give more specific instructions, in the absence of a request therefor.—Moultrie Compress Co. v. Byrom Cotton Co., 79 S. E. 589.

§ 256 (N.C.) Where the court has given a proper instruction on a particular subject, if a party desires more specific instructions he must ask for them.—Monds v. Town of Dunn, 79 S. E. 303.

§ 256 (S.C.) Where the charge as a whole is free from error, the defendant should present requests to charge, if it desires more specific instructions.—Gossett v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 79 S. E. 309.

§ 256 (S.C.) Where a charge is desired on a special phase of the case, it must be brought to the attention of the court by request to charge, and, in the absence of appropriate request, the giving of a mere general charge is not error.—Hiller v. Bank of Columbia, 79 S. E. 890.

§ 259 (Ga.) Failure to charge relative to certain admissions relied on by plaintiff to establish a resulting trust held not error in the absence of an appropriate written request therefor.—Banks v. Bradwell, 79 S. E. 572.

§ 259 (Ga.App.) In the absence of written requests for specific instructions, the court was not required to give the meaning of the word "consent," as necessarily free and not obtained by fraud, as defined in Civ. Code 1910, § 4480, and use it in an instruction given.—City of Americus v. Phillips, 79 S. E. 36.

§ 260 (Va.) It is not error to refuse one of defendant's requests to charge where the jury was liberally instructed on every phase of defendant's theory of the case.—Nesbit v. Webb, 79 S. E. 330.

§ 260 (Va.) Instructions, that the persons who were required to perform certain duties under a contract were the engineers within its meaning, were unnecessary, and the court did not err in refusing them, where the jury were instructed that if they believed that certain persons, whom the evidence showed were the ones who performed such duties, were appointed to perform them, that they were the engineers.

—Luck Const. Co. v. Russell County, 79 S. E. 393.

§ 261 (Ga.) In an action for injuries from a crossing accident, an instruction on the effect of plaintiff's negligence, which was confusing in the use of the word "diligence" for "negligence," was properly refused.—Georgia & F. Ry. v. Newton, 79 S. E. 142.

§ 267 (Va.) In an action for injuries to a railway mail clerk, where there is evidence of contributory negligence, the court should modify an erroneous instruction on that issue tendered by the defendant, or should give another instruction in lieu thereof.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

§ 267 (W.Va.) Where an instruction, though good as an abstract proposition, may tend to mislead when applied to a concrete case, it is not error for the court to so modify its language as to make it cover the case presented.—Greer v. Arrington, 79 S. E. 720.

(G) Construction and Operation.

§ 295 (Ga.App.) Excerpts from instructions should be considered in connection with the entire charge to determine their sufficiency.—Lyon v. Cedartown Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 236.

§ 295 (Ga.App.) In an action for goods sold, general instructions on fraud, without limiting their application to the fraud pleaded, were not error, where, from the instructions as a whole, the jury must have understood that they must determine from the evidence whether defendant was defrauded as alleged.—Kerr Glass Mfg. Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 79 S. E. 381.

§ 295 (N.C.) The charge as a whole is to be considered, and where every position available to appellant was correctly referred to the jury, that portions of the instructions standing by themselves might be open to criticism is not reversible error.—Bird v. Bell Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 448.

§ 295 (S.C.) Where the charge as a whole instructed that plaintiff must make out his case by the greater weight of the evidence, the fact that the charge in some places also required that he prove his case by a clear preponderance of the evidence did not render it erroneous, as requiring too high a degree of proof.—Mullaly v. Smyth, 79 S. E. 634.

§ 295 (S.C.) Statement in charge that proof of injury to a servant by defective machinery was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the master held not error in view of the remainder of the charge.—Bennett v. Southern Ry.-Carolina Division, 79 S. E. 710.

The charge in an action for the wrongful death of a servant held not objectionable as one on the facts when considered as a whole.—Id.

§ 296 (Ga.) In an instruction in an action by plaintiff to recover for the death of her husband, an omission to charge that to recover it must appear that his death was caused by negligence of defendant, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, was not cause for new trial, where the court had previously instructed that plaintiff could not recover if decedent was killed by his own carelessness, or if by ordinary care he could have avoided the negligence of defendant.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. Anchors, 79 S. E. 153.

§ 296 (Ga.App.) A charge on contributory negligence, which in itself is insufficient, is not erroneous, where the court in another part of the charge instructed fully on the law of contributory negligence.—Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. McKey, 79 S. E. 378.

§ 296 (N.C.) In an action for breach of contract, an instruction that the jury must be convinced that the contract was made as alleged by plaintiff before they could find for plaintiff was sufficient, in connection with another instruction distinctly placing the burden of proof upon the plaintiff.—Holt v. Wellons, 79 S. E. 450.

§ 296 (N.C.) In an action on an accepted order, an instruction, erroneous because not addressed to any particular issue, was harmless, where the jury, in the light of the other instructions, could not have been misled thereby.—Craig & Wilson v. Stewart & Jones, 79 S. E. 1100.

Where two instructions, one good and the other bad, are so blended and applied to a single issue as not to be separable, and it is impossible to determine under which instruction the jury answered the issues, the case will be reversed on appeal.—Id.

§ 296 (Va.) In an action for injuries received by a railway mail clerk, instructions permitting recovery without showing a sudden checking of the train, as alleged in the declaration, held not to be misleading in view of an instruction given at defendant's request, requiring such fact to be proved.—Virginian Ry. Co. v. Bell, 79 S. E. 396.

II. VERDICT.

(A) General Verdict.

§ 330 (N.C.) Where, notwithstanding there was no evidence of fraud in the alleged omission of a certain stipulation from a contract, the court submitted that question to the jury, a finding that the provision was omitted by fraud or mistake was unsustainable.—Wilson v. Scarborough, 79 S. E. 811.

§ 343 (S.C.) The verdict must be construed as resolving all inferences in favor of the successful party.—Aldrich v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 316.

(B) Special Interrogatories and Findings.

§ 350 (Ga.App.) Where, in an action for goods sold, the only defense relied on was that the goods were worthless, and fraud, though pleaded, was not an essential part of the defense, it was not error to refuse to instruct the jury to specify whether the verdict was based upon defendant's plea of rescission or plea of failure of consideration.—Kerr Glass Mfg. Co. v. Americus Grocery Co., 79 S. E. 381.

X. TRIAL BY COURT.

(A) Hearing and Determination of Cause.

§ 373 (S.C.) Under Code Civ. Proc. 1912, § 312, where special issues are submitted to a jury in a suit for specific performance, an instruction that the court is not bound by the jury's findings, is not error.—Mullaly v. Smyth, 79 S. E. 634.

§ 374 (S.C.) The court has the right in all equity cases to submit both legal and equitable issues raised by the pleadings to the jury, and need not require them to return a general verdict.—McLain v. Allen, 79 S. E. 1.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

§ 1 (Ga.App.) Trover lies only where there has been a conversion.—Jeems v. Lewis, 79 S. E. 235.

II. ACTIONS.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 13 (Ga.App.) Trover will not lie to recover possession of a deed executed to defendant, or a nonnegotiable note and certificates of deposit payable to defendant, on the ground that the writings were improperly taken in defendant's name, when they should have been taken in that of plaintiff; plaintiff's remedy being in equity.—Gaskins v. Gaskins, 79 S. E. 483.

§ 16 (Ga.App.) Where the evidence showed that defendant, a member of a firm succeeded by plaintiffs, which formerly owned the horse sued for, had exchanged it for another horse, which the partnership accepted, and that when plaintiffs came into possession of the assets the firm had parted with the title to the horse, the evidence demanded a verdict for defendant.—Fisher v. Beach, Hinson & Co., 79 S. E. 84.

§ 17 (Ga.App.) A person who holds property as security for a debt may maintain trover for its recovery from one who wrongfully withholds possession thereof.—Gearreld v. Woodruff, 79 S. E. 355.

§ 17 (Ga.App.) Trover will not lie where the title to the property sought to be recovered rests in a partnership, and plaintiff's interest therein cannot be determined until a full partnership accounting has been had.—Cox v. Manning, 79 S. E. 484.

§ 23 (Ga.App.) Where a husband makes a gift of a chattel to his wife in conformity with Civ. Code 1910, § 4144, prescribing the essentials of a gift, and afterwards regains possession, he cannot, in trover by the wife to recover the chattel, set up title in a third person at the time the gift was made.—Hartz v. Hartz, 79 S. E. 230.

§ 23 (Ga.App.) There can be no conversion of a chattel so long as the party in possession has a right to retain it against the person claiming the right to recover it.—Jeems v. Lewis, 79 S. E. 235.

§ 25 (Ga.) Where two persons conspire to steal personal property, and one of them commits the larceny, while the other is present aiding and abetting, both are liable in trover, though the aider and abettor never acquires any part of the stolen goods.—Brothers v. Horne, 79 S. E. 468.

(B) Jurisdiction, Parties, Preliminary Proceedings, and Pleading.

§ 32 (Ga.App.) The description of machinery in a petition in trover as situated in a certain town along a certain right of way, being that formerly used by defendant and described in an instrument identified by stating the parties, date, and place and date of record, is sufficient.—Blakely Artesian Ice Co. v. Clarke, 79 S. E. 526.

(C) Evidence.

§ 35 (Ga.App.) The burden is on the plaintiff in trover to prove not only title but also right of possession where he has by contract surrendered possession to another.—Birmingham Fertilizer Co. v. Dozier, 79 S. E. 927.

§ 40 (Ga.) Where, in trover to recover a stolen diamond, there was no evidence that one of the defendants was ever in possession thereof, and no proof connecting him with its alleged theft, the evidence was insufficient to sustain a verdict against him.—Brothers v. Horne, 79 S. E. 468.

§ 40 (Ga.App.) Evidence in trover to recover certain promissory notes held to sustain a verdict for defendant.—Birmingham Fertilizer Co. v. Dozier, 79 S. E. 927.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND VALIDITY.

(A) Express Trusts.

§§ 17, 18 (N.C.) The statute of frauds requiring that a sale of land must be evidenced by a memorandum signed by the party to be charged has no application to a declaration of trust as to land.—Anderson v. Harrington, 79 S. E. 428.

§ 21 (Ga.) It is no objection to the validity of trust created by a deed that the cestuis que trust cannot be definitely known until the death of the trustee, but is sufficient that they come into being during the trustee's life and be distinguished at her death.—Heyward-Williams Co. v. McCall, 79 S. E. 133.

§ 35 (N.C.) It is not necessary that a trustee be declared in any particular mode, and where money was loaned a purchaser of land to pay the purchase price, and a deed taken in the purchaser's name under an oral agreement that when the loan should be repaid each would have a half interest in the land, a trust was hereby created in favor of the purchaser.—Anderson v. Harrington, 79 S. E. 426.

(B) Resulting Trusts.

§ 72 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, §§ 3739, 3780, where a trust would be implied from the payment of the purchase money by another, it will be implied where the recipient uses such money for other purposes, and substitutes his own money to pay for the land.—Banks v. Bradwell, 9 S. E. 572.

§ 77 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3739, relative to implied trusts, a resulting trust is not created by the payment of the price, unless the payment is made either before or at the time of purchase.—Hall v. Edwards, 79 S. E. 862.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(A) In General.

§ 124 (Ga.) In a deed conveying land to F., trustee for her children," the words quoted, though usually construed to refer to only such persons as are in life, referred to such as might be thereafter born, where other language in the deed indicated that such was the maker's intention.—Heyward-Williams Co. v. McCall, 79 S. E. 133.

VII. ESTABLISHMENT AND ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST.

(C) Actions.

§ 366 (N.C.) Plaintiff held not entitled to establish a parol trust in his own favor against the grantee in his deed, and his wife and children alleged to be the other beneficiaries of the trust, in a suit to which they were not made parties.—Cavenaugh v. Jarman, 79 S. E. 678.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

UNITED STATES.

USURY.

I. USURIOUS CONTRACTS AND TRANSACTIONS.

(B) Rights and Remedies of Parties.

§ 98 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3442, providing that a conveyance to secure a debt infected with usury is void, the grantor may have a homestead set apart in the property sought to be conveyed, which will not be subject to a judgment on the debt, though the usury be eliminated when the judgment is taken.—McConnell v. Gregory, 79 S. E. 1128.

(C) Rights and Remedies of Third Persons.

§ 127 (S.C.) That the bank at which plaintiff discounted defendant's note charged usurious interest on a subsequent renewal note is no defense where, having paid a second renewal note as indorsee, plaintiff brought action to foreclose a mortgage given as security, though usury, added to the face of the second renewal note from which plaintiff received benefit, was not recoverable.—Simpson v. Cox; 79 S. E. 102.

VACATION.

See Judgment, §§ 358-386.

VAGRANCY.

§ 1 (Ga.App.) A married woman, whose husband is not shown to be able to support her, cannot be convicted of vagrancy on proof that she is able to work and does not work, though she and her husband may be living apart.—Brown v. State, 79 S. E. 1133.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

See Appeal and Error, § 150; Constitutional Law, § 278; Deeds, § 117; Evidence, § 142; Homestead, §§ 120, 131; Husband and Wife, §§ 185-198; Lis Pendens; Mechanics' Liens, § 279; Railroads, § 253; Remainders; Sales; Specific Performance; Trusts, §§ 17, 18, 72.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

§ 13 (N.C.) Marriage is a valuable consideration for a contract for the sale of land.—Winslow v. White, 79 S. E. 258.

An agreement by defendant that, if plaintiff would marry his daughter and be good and kind to her, he would give him a strip of land held to constitute an agreement in consideration of marriage to convey such land.—Id.

§ 18 (Va.) An option to purchase land can be accepted only on the terms contained therein.—Triplett v. Gudebrod, 79 S. E. 1046.

§ 22 (N.C.) Agreement to convey land held to sufficiently describe the land.—Winslow v. White, 79 S. E. 258.

§ 39 (Ga.) A contract for the sale of land is not invalid because it secures to the vendor a right to repurchase.—Cowart v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF CONTRACT.

§ 51 (N.C.) In determining the meaning of a stipulation in an agreement to convey land in consideration of marriage, held, that the language used, the relationship and purpose of the donor, and the attendant circumstances were all proper for consideration.—Winslow v. White, 79 S. E. 258.

III. MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.

(B) Rescission by Vendor.

§ 95 (Ga.) Acceptance of purchase money by a vendor precluded her from claiming a forfeiture under a provision of the sale contract authorizing a forfeiture on nonpayment of any installment of the price.—Cowart v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

(C) Rescission by Purchaser.

§ 120 (Va.) Where a deed provided that at the end of five years grantor should ascertain whether the grantee was satisfied, and, if not, should return the price, and receive a reconveyance, a statement by grantee when approached at the time set, that "I am about of the same opinion that I was when the transaction was had; get your money ready," meant that grantee was dissatisfied, and intended to reconvey.—Burner v. Burner, 79 S. E. 1050.

Such provision entitled grantor to a reconveyance upon paying such amount to grantee, provided the latter declared he was not satisfied.—Id.

The grantor was entitled to a reasonable time before the expiration of such five years to raise the money to himself perform, and seven days before the expiration of such period was a reasonable time for ascertaining grantee's wishes.—Id.

Where grantee stated that he was dissatisfied when questioned seven days before the end of the five years, when grantor began to raise the money for a reconveyance, grantee could not afterwards change his mind and refuse to reconvey on the ground that grantor did not wait until the exact expiration of the five-year period.—Id.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

(A) Title and Estate of Vendor.

§ 129 (N.C.) In view of Revisal 1905, § 1578, converting estates tail into fee-simple estates, a purchaser could not refuse to perform a contract for the purchase of land the chain of title to which contained a deed to the grantee and her bodily heirs.—Harrington v. Grimes, 79 S. E. 301.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

(A) As to Each Other.

§ 197 (N.C.) An agreement to purchase property subject to the incumbrances thereon did not constitute an assumption of such incumbrances so as to make the purchaser personally liable to the vendor for an amount paid by the vendor to satisfy an incumbrance.—Henry v. Heggie, 79 S. E. 982.

A covenant in a deed to assume all incumbrances on the property as a part of the consideration, with special reference to particular mortgages, which were excepted from the warranty, constituted an assumption of the mortgage debt by the grantee and an indemnity against its payment by the grantor.—Id.

§ 208 (Ga.) The vendor's title stands as a security for unpaid purchase-money notes, and the vendor cannot, without the consent of the purchaser, separate the title into fractional undivided interests by transferring the notes to different persons, or thus empower a transferee to obtain a judgment, file a deed, and sell an undivided interest, as provided by Civ. Code 1910, § 6037, or obtain a general judgment against the purchaser, with a special lien upon the undivided interest; such a transaction not being authorized by section 6037, which provides for the filing of a quitclaim deed and the sale of property under a purchase-money judgment.—Strickland v. Lowry Nat. Bank, 79 S. E. 539.

(B) As to Third Persons in General.

§ 214 (Ga.) Under Civ. Code 1910, § 3657, defining a fee-simple estate, and section 3718, providing that a condition repugnant to the estate granted is void, a stipulation of a bond for title that the bond should not be transferred, if construed as an absolute restriction upon any alienation of the land, is void.—Cowart v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

Where the holder of a bond for title conveyed land by a warranty deed, such conveyance did not constitute a transfer of the bond within the meaning of a stipulation prohibiting such a transfer.—Id.

Where C. conveyed land to S. on his agreement to pay a balance due from C. to H. on the price, and where subsequently H. conveyed the land to G., and where there was evidence that H. knew of the conveyance to S., and accepted payments from S., and that G. knew such facts, held, that a provision of the bond for title received by C. from H., that the bond should not be transferable, did not preclude S. from enforcing his equitable rights in the land.—Id.

§ 215 (Ga.) A provision in a bond for title restricting the purchaser's right to alienate the land until the last payment of the purchase money shall fall due is enforceable only for the benefit of the vendor, and not enforceable after such purchase money has been paid in full.—Cowart v. Singletary, 79 S. E. 196.

(C) Bona Fide Purchasers.

§ 228 (N.C.) A purchaser having notice of an opposing claim is thereby placed upon inquiry and charged with notice of every fact which a proper inquiry would have discovered.—Rae-ford Lumber Co. v. Rockfish Trading Co., 79 S. E. 627.

§ 233 (N.C.) A deed is not valid as against a junior deed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration which is first registered.—Thompson v. Thomas, 79 S. E. 896.

§ 235 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 980, providing that no conveyance of land shall be valid as against creditors or purchasers for a valuable consideration but from the registration thereof, registration is not required as against a subsequent deed, made without a valuable consideration.—Thompson v. Thomas, 79 S. E. 896.

VII. REMEDIES OF PURCHASER.

(A) Recovery of Purchase Money Paid.

§ 334 (Ga.App.) Where land is sold at a stipulated price per acre, and plaintiff pays an excess over the stipulated price, not because of fraud of defendant, or any negligence of plaintiff, but simply through a mistake made by the surveyor, whom both selected to ascertain the exact acreage, plaintiff is entitled to recover the excess so paid.—Mobley v. Harrell, 79 S. E. 872.

(B) Actions for Breach of Contract.

§ 343 (S.C.) Where a vendor of land, upon being informed that there was a deficiency, insisted that land underneath the nonnavigable stream upon which the tract bordered should be surveyed and included, there was no waiver on his part of the right to have such land included, though he was not present at the survey.—Southern Power Co. v. Cassels, 79 S. E. 453.

§ 344 (Ga.) It is ordinarily a condition precedent to a purchaser's right to sue for damages for breach of a contract of sale for cash that he tender the cash or such tender be waived.—Smith v. Tatum, 79 S. E. 775.

A proposition to the owner of land that he send a conveyance to a city in another state, and receive payment, or that the purchaser would send a check to a bank to be delivered upon delivery of the conveyance, held not to constitute such a tender of performance of a contract to sell for cash as entitled plaintiff to sue for breach of contract.—Id.

§ 349 (S.C.) In an action for an alleged deficiency discovered on the subsequent survey, defendant may under a general denial show that the survey was only partial.—Southern Power Co. v. Cassels, 79 S. E. 453.

VENUE.

See Bills and Notes, § 454; Constitutional Law, §§ 206, 249, 305; Criminal Law, §§ 130, 1023; Injunction, § 111; Insurance, § 618; Partnership, § 820.

II. DOMICILE OR RESIDENCE OF PARTIES.

§ 22 (Ga.App.) Where the court has jurisdiction of the person of one defendant when a suit is filed, the mere fact that such defendant is discharged in bankruptcy will not prevent the court from proceeding to judgment against another defendant, jurisdiction over whom is dependent, not upon the liability of the bankrupt, but upon jurisdiction over him.—Daniel v. Browder-Manget Co., 79 S. E. 237.

WAR.

§ 29 (N.C.) Under section 25 of the Declaration of Rights of 1776, the Confiscation Acts (Laws 1777 [2d Sess.] c. 17, and Laws 1779 [2d Sess.] c. 2), and the Entry Act (Laws 1777 [2d Sess.] c. 1), lands to which one of the lords proprietors of Carolina had title held to have been held by him as a quasi sovereign and not as an individual, to have passed to the state by right of conquest, and to have been subject to entry and grant.—Weston v. John L. Roper Lumber Co., 79 S. E. 431.

WAREHOUSEMEN.

See Customs and Usages, § 15.

§ 22 (Ga.) Where there is an express contract or a custom requiring a warehouseman to insure the goods intrusted to him, he is liable for loss sustained by reason of his failure to insure.—Farmers' Ginnery & Mfg. Co. v. Thrasher, 79 S. E. 474.

A warehouseman holds the proceeds of insurance upon the stored goods, which have been destroyed by fire, for the benefit of the insured customers.—Id.

The proceeds of the sale of goods, damaged in a warehouse fire so that they could not be identified, are held by the warehouseman for the benefit of all the owners of the goods, whether their goods were insured or not.—Id.

A warehouseman, who fails to insure the goods for as much as he should, is liable to the customers severally to the extent of the deficiency of the insurance.—Id.

§ 22 (Ga.App.) A warehouseman, agreeing to insure cotton stored with it, subsequently destroyed by fire, is liable for the full value, though it acted in good faith in compromising with the insurers on policies covering cotton, and has been guilty of no negligence, and though it has failed to insure the particular cotton.—Rochelle Gin & Cotton Co. v. Fisher, 79 S. E. 584.

§ 34 (Ga.) Where a petition against a warehouseman for an accounting of the proceeds of insurance and the sale of goods showed that the duty to insure covered a period of only 30 days, and did not allege the several dates on which the goods were stored, it was subject to a special demurrer on that ground.—Farmers' Ginnery & Mfg. Co. v. Thrasher, 79 S. E. 474.

Where a suit for an accounting by a warehouseman for goods destroyed by fire was not founded upon the warehouse receipts, the petition was not demurrable for failing to set forth the form or substance of the receipts.—Id.

A petition in an action against a warehouse corporation, based on an alleged parol contract to insure the goods is not subject to special demurrer on the ground that it failed to allege the name of the agent who made the contract.—Id.

A petition against a warehouse corporation for an accounting of the proceeds of insurance and sales of goods destroyed or damaged by fire, which does not allege a breach of the duty as to the fund, or that the company had suspended business, or was insolvent, or that there was danger of loss of property, did not allege grounds for the appointment of a receiver or the granting of an injunction.—Id.

WATERS AND WATER COURSES.

See Eminent Domain, § 98; Evidence, § 543; Mines and Minerals, § 81; Municipal Corporations, §§ 839, 845.

V. SURFACE WATERS.

§ 89 (S.C.) An owner of land abutting on a nonnavigable stream owns to the middle of the bed of the stream, and, on conveyance of his land as including a given number of acres, the submerged land should be included.—Southern Power Co. v. Cassels, 79 S. E. 453.

§ 126 (Ga.) An action for damages to farm lands by water ponded thereon by a railroad embankment, so as to render it unfit for cultivation, held to be an action for damages resulting from the maintenance of a continuing nuisance.—Williams v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 850.

In an action for damages from the maintenance of an embankment constituting a continuing nuisance, against the alienee of the railroad company creating it, it was error to instruct that if there had been any overflow within four years and plaintiff was injured from the "increased overflow," defendant would be liable for the consequential damages; the damages in such case not being restricted to those caused by "increased overflow."—Id.

IX. PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY.

(A) Domestic and Municipal Purposes.

§ 190 (Ga.) A contract between a city and a property owner reciting a grant to the city of the right to use a spring as a source of water supply in consideration of the city's furnishing the necessary plumbing to convey water to the owner's residence was not invalid for want of consideration.—Hall v. City of Calhoun, 79 S. E. 533.

Where a contract authorized a city to use a spring that fed a fish pond on the land of a private owner for municipal water supply, the city acquired the right to a reasonable use of the water, notwithstanding it might operate to the detriment of the fish pond.—Id.

Where a city, in consideration of the right to use a spring on the land of a private owner as a source of municipal water supply, granted the right to the landowner to use water from the city's mains free of charge, such right was not assignable.—Id.

WAYS.

See Easements, § 17.

WEAPONS.

§ 3 (Ga.App.) Act Aug. 12, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 134), prohibiting any person from carrying a pistol without a license, should receive a reasonable construction in accordance with the purpose of the Legislature.—Casper v. State, 79 S. E. 94.

§ 13 (Ga.App.) One who finds a pistol on the public road, and carries it to his home for safe-keeping until it is called for by its owner, is not guilty of violation of the act prohibiting the carrying of pistols without a license.—Casper v. State, 79 S. E. 94.

WHISTLES.

See Railroads, §§ 419, 446.

WILLS.

See Dower, § 20; Executors and Administrators; Perpetuities; Powers; Witnesses, § 92.

I. NATURE AND EXTENT OF TESTAMENTARY POWER.

§ 6 (N.C.) A partner cannot bequeath or devise his undivided interest in any specific article belonging to the firm, since each has a joint interest in the whole but not a separate interest in any particular part of the partnership property.—Spencer v. Spencer, 79 S. E. 291.

II. TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

§ 52 (N.C.) Where it is shown that a will was properly executed, the law presumes that the testator had the power to make it, and the burden is on the caveators to show lack of mental capacity, and, if the jury are not satisfied that the testator lacked mental capacity, they must find such capacity in accordance with such presumption.—In re Cherry's Will, 79 S. E. 288.

§ 53 (N.C.) A record of proceedings involving the testator's sanity, made some time after the execution of the will, was not in such reasonable proximity in point of time to the fact in issue as to have any tendency to establish the same.—In re Smith's Will, 79 S. E. 977.

III. CONTRACTS TO DEVISE OR BEQUEATH.

§ 58 (W.Va.) An oral contract to make a will, if certain and definite, and upon sufficient consideration, if equitable, is as valid and enforceable against the estate of a decedent as any other valid contract.—Davidson v. Davidson, 79 S. E. 908.

Contracts of this character are viewed by courts with suspicion, are not favored, and to be enforceable must be upon sufficient consideration, be equitable, definite, and certain, and clearly proven.—Id.

§ 59 (W.Va.) A parol contract between an unmarried woman and a man of large property, after the birth of her child, of which he was the father, that he would provide for her and her child by will as if he were married to her, is supported by a sufficient consideration, and enforceable against his estate.—Davidson v. Davidson, 79 S. E. 908.

IV. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(B) Form and Contents of Instruments.

§ 99 (N.C.) A letter written by testator immediately after he had executed his will and just before his departure for a European trip, in which he stated: "If I die I want you to have your part of the five thousand insurance I took out for Spencer Bros. I have written to Bro. George to see that you get it"—was not a codicil because not made animo testandi.—Spencer v. Spencer, 79 S. E. 291.

(C) Execution.

§ 120 (N.C.) A testator need not expressly ask the witnesses to sign their names as witnesses thereto, if the will is executed under such circumstances as to indicate that he intended the paper writing that he signed to take effect as his will.—In re Cherry's Will, 79 S. E. 288.

§ 123 (N.C.) While testator must sign a will in the presence of two witnesses, who must in his presence sign their names as attesting witnesses, it is not necessary that he must see the paper at the instant that the witnesses sign if they are in such a position that he could see them sign, if he so desired.—In re Cherry's Will, 79 S. E. 288.

(G) Revocation and Revival.

§ 194 (Va.) Where testatrix gave house and lot to be sold and equally divided between two great-nephews, held, that the gift was revoked by the sale of the house and lot by the testatrix in her lifetime, whether treated as a devise of the house and lot, or a bequest of the proceeds.—May v. Sherrard's Legatees, 79 S. E. 1026.

Where testatrix disposed of house and lot given to two grandnephews, the fact that she stated in a codicil that she had disposed of it and reinvested the proceeds in other real estate held not to prevent a revocation.—Id.

V. PROBATE, ESTABLISHMENT, AND ANNULMENT.

(D) Probate or Record of Foreign Wills.

§ 246 (W.Va.) Admission to record by the clerk of a county court of West Virginia of a copy of a will probated in another state amounts, under Code 1906, c. 77, § 26, to a probate thereof, which cannot be collaterally drawn in question, or set aside otherwise than as prescribed by Code 1906, c. 77, § 25.—William James' Sons Co. v. Crouch, 79 S. E. 815.

(E) Jurisdiction, Limitations, and Laches.

§ 261 (N.C.) While there is no statute of limitations affecting the right of parties under a will, yet when a will has been regularly proven in common form, the right to caveat may be lost by lapse of time.—In re Dupree's Will, 79 S. E. 611.

Where a will was duly admitted to probate and recorded in December, 1887, and testator's daughter, who married while a minor prior to her father's death, with knowledge of all the facts, did not file a sufficient caveat until March 6, 1911, her right was barred by laches, notwithstanding her coverture and the fact of the continued residence of her brother, to whom all testator's land was devised, in another state after he had sold the land in 1889.—Id.

(F) Parties and Process or Notice.

§ 269 (N.C.) Revisal 1905, § 3123, providing that a devisee applying for probate of a will, in case the executor does not, must give notice, applies to the probate of a codicil.—Spencer v. Spencer, 79 S. E. 291.

(H) Evidence.

§ 292 (N.C.) On the trial of a caveat filed to a will offered for probate, evidence that the propounders were claiming under the alleged will property which was given thereby to the caveators was properly excluded.—In re Cherry's Will, 79 S. E. 288.

On the trial of a caveat filed to an alleged will offered for probate, evidence that one of the caveators had paid a physician for attending deceased, and had also paid for a monument for deceased, was properly excluded.—Id.

§ 293 (Ga.) That a will was signed in the presence of the subscribing witnesses may be shown by other competent testimony, where they testify that they cannot remember, and even where one or more denies that the testator signed in their presence.—Brock v. Brock, 79 S. E. 473.

§ 302 (W. Va.) Evidence, on the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, held insufficient to sustain a verdict against the validity of the will.—Carpenter v. Hayhurst, 79 S. E. 819.

(I) Hearing or Trial.

§ 324 (Ga.) Where, on the probate of a will, there was abundant uncontradicted evidence to show testator's testamentary capacity, it was not error to instruct that the question whether testator was of sound mind and memory was not in issue.—Brock v. Brock, 79 S. E. 473.

(J) Judgment or Decree.

§ 355 (N.C.) Where a judgment in a will contest invalidating the will was set aside for fraud, the caveat filed against the will remained in full force and effect until the issue raised thereby was tried and a valid judgment rendered.—Holt v. Ziglar, 79 S. E. 805.

(K) Operation and Effect.

§ 424 (N.C.) The probate of a will before the clerk in common form is conclusive evidence of its validity, until it is vacated or declared void by a competent tribunal.—Holt v. Ziglar, 79 S. E. 805.

VI. CONSTRUCTION.

(A) General Rules.

§ 461 (Va.) Where testatrix, after giving stock certificate to two grandnephews, stated that she had another certificate, and that, "I wish to go to" acid, that the provision as to this last certificate was so indefinite that it passed under the residuary clause.—May v. Sherrard's Legatees, 79 S. E. 1026.

Where a testator's intention is manifest, one word may be substituted for another, but this cannot be done unless the testator's intention is clear or manifest.—Id.

§ 487 (Ga.) Parol evidence of testator's expressed intention is inadmissible to vary the terms of an unambiguous will.—Hanvy v. Moore, 79 S. E. 772.

(B) Designation of Devisees, and Legatees and Their Respective Shares.

§ 506 (Ga.) A will providing that the residue of testator's estate be distributed equally among his legal heirs, construed in the light of Civ. Code 1910, § 3931, relative to the wife's dower, and held that the widow was not included in the phrase "legal heirs," and did not share in the residue.—Hanvy v. Moore, 79 S. E. 772.

(C) Survivorship, Representation, and Substitution.

§ 543 (Ga.) Under a will bequeathing to testator's wife one year's support and certain property during her life or widowhood, and thereafter to his five heirs, naming them, and providing that if a certain two of such heirs should die after testator and before his wife, their shares should revert to the general estate, to be divided among testator's heirs, the wife took an estate for life or widowhood in the land devised and also one-fifth of the fee in the remainder.—Hanvy v. Moore, 79 S. E. 772.

(D) Description of Property.

§ 564 (Va.) In a will providing that the testator's wife shall support herself and the unmarried daughters out of the income from the real estate, the wife is entitled only to a sufficient amount to support them in their station in life, and the balance is to be retained and divided when the property is divided.—Ross v. Ross, 79 S. E. 343.

§ 565 (Va.) Where a testator bequeathed money separately to his wife, to whom he also gave all his personal property, that fact held not sufficient to indicate that the testator did not use the term "personal property" in its technical sense, in view of his knowledge of that sense and of the other clauses of the will.—Ross v. Ross, 79 S. E. 343.

(E) Nature of Estates and Interests Created.

§ 597 (N.C.) Will construed, and held to vest in testator's widow the fee in all his property without trust or other limitation.—Fellows v. Durfee, 79 S. E. 621.

§ 600 (N.C.) A devise generally of real estate, with a power of disposition, passes the fee without restriction, but a devise for life with power of disposition creates only a life estate with the power annexed; the test whether the fee or merely a life estate passes is whether the testator expressly limits the devise to the first taker to a life estate by specific language.—Griffin v. Commander, 79 S. E. 499.

§ 601 (N.C.) A devise generally of real estate, "with power to give and devise the same after her (the devisee's) death, to our beloved children and grandchildren," not expressly restricting the devisee's estate to a life estate, passes the fee without restriction, and the words quoted are to be regarded as mere surplusage as the right to devise is incident to the fee.—Griffin v. Commander, 79 S. E. 499.

§ 614 (Ga.) An item of a will construed in accordance with Civ. Code 1910, § 3600, and held to create a life estate in each of testator's children respectively, with a contingent remainder over as to such share to the children of each child, and with an executory devise in case any child of testator should die without issue.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 546.

(F) Vested or Contingent Estates and Interests.

§ 634 (Ga.) Where a will created a life estate in each of testator's children respectively, with a contingent remainder over as to such share as to children of each child, and with an executory devise in case any child of testator should die without issue, and where a son of testator survived him and died leaving lawful children, they took vested interests in their father's share.—Wright v. Hill, 79 S. E. 546.

(H) Estates in Trust and Powers.

§ 689 (Ga.) A will held to confer upon testator's widow absolute power to sell, not merely a life estate, but the fee to any part of the estate, when necessary for her support, and to exclude his children from any part of the property so sold, leaving that part of his estate which might remain at her death to be divided among the children, though in one item it provided that she should take charge of all the property "without any appraisal and use it as she needs for her comfort and support."—Stark v. Chambers, 79 S. E. 535.

§ 693 (Ga.) Where a testator made specific devises to his children and issue of deceased children, with certain conditions, and devised certain property to his wife for life, with power to devise it to such of testator's children and issue of deceased children as she might desire, upon the same conditions as the devises were made to them in testator's will, the power of the wife extended only to the nomination of certain persons from a class, and the apportionment of property among her appointees, who would take under the donor's will, subject to the conditions imposed upon each appointee.—Grayson v. Germania Bank, 79 S. E. 124.

VII. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES.

(A) Nature of Title and Rights in General.

§ 733 (Va.) A holographic will, bequeathing $3,000 in cash and all the testator's personal property to his wife, held to give her the cash immediately upon his death, and entitle her to the balance of the personal property at the settlement of the estate.—Ross v. Ross, 79 S. E. 343.

§ 740 (S.C.) Where property was conveyed in trust for a woman and her heirs, with power to her of appointment by will, and she, after selling part of it, and giving one child the proceeds thereof, divided the remainder among the other children, the other children, after accepting the benefits of the will, cannot attack the conveyance.—Huggins v. Price, 79 S. E. 798.

(B) Specific, Demonstrative, and General Devises and Bequests.

§ 750 (Va.) As a general rule, a legacy will not be construed as specific unless it appears clearly to have been so intended, and whether or not it is specific depends wholly upon the language of the will.—May v. Sherrard's Legatees, 79 S. E. 1028.

§ 751 (Va.) Where testatrix gave house and lot to be sold and equally divided between two great-nephews, held, that the gift was specific.—May v. Sherrard's Legatees, 79 S. E. 1026.

(C) Advancements, Ademption, Satisfaction, and Lapse.

§ 767 (Va.) Where testatrix disposed of house and lot given to two grandnephews, the fact that she stated in a codicil that she had disposed of it and reinvested the proceeds in other real estate held not to prevent ademption.—May v. Sherrard's Legatees, 79 S. E. 1026.

(D) Election.

§ 781 (W.Va.) A devisee cannot take under one provision of a will and deny the validity of another provision.—Wiley v. Ball, 79 S. E. 659.

WITNESSES.

See Criminal Law, §§ 594, 603, 656, 665, 785, 818, 1153; Depositions, § 64; Evidence; Municipal Corporations, §§ 640, 642; Perjury; Process, § 126; States, §§ 34, 40; Trial, § 236; Wills, §§ 120, 123, 293.

I. ATTENDANCE, PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, AND COMPENSATION.

§ 5 (N.C.) Practicing attorney held not excused from obeying a subpoena to appear as a witness under Revisal 1905, § 1643, because cases in which he appeared were ready for trial in another court.—In re Pierce, 79 S. E. 507.

§ 22 (N.C.) To render a witness liable for the penalty prescribed by Revisal 1905, § 1643, for a failure to attend when summoned, it is not necessary the failure should be willful.—In re Pierce, 79 S. E. 507.

Intentional failure of witness to attend court as such, although under an erroneous belief as to his rights, held willful if Revisal 1905, § 1643, prescribing the penalty for such failure, requires it to be willful.—Id.

II. COMPETENCY.

(A) Capacity and Qualifications in General.

§ 37 (Ga.) That a witness, testifying as to a conversation overheard by him, had heard only a part of such conversation did not render him incompetent to testify to the part which he had heard.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 37 (N.C.) In action on account for groceries, witness who testified that he presented an account to the debtor held properly permitted to testify that it was for groceries, though he had not sold any of the goods to the debtor.—Scott v. Reynolds, 79 S. E. 960.

§ 37 (N.C.) Questions asked witnesses were properly excluded, where it appeared that the witnesses did not have the requisite knowledge of the facts to answer them.—In re Smith's Will, 79 S. E. 977.

§ 58 (N.C.) Under Revisal 1905, § 1636, making a husband and wife of any party competent to testify except to give evidence "for or against each other" in criminal action or action brought because of adultery or of criminal conversation construed with sections 1628, 1629, 1630, held, that a husband could testify, in an action for alienation of affections, as to the adultery of his wife with defendant.—Powell v. Strickland, 79 S. E. 872.

§ 60 (Ga.) The common-law disqualification of a party to testify as a witness on the ground of interest has been expressly preserved by Civ. Code 1910, § 5861, in cases arising from adultery.—Anderson v. Anderson, 79 S. E. 1124.

Where a wife sues her husband for divorce for cruelty and intoxication, she is a competent witness in her own behalf.—Id.

Where, to a suit of a wife for divorce, the husband files a cross-libel, the wife is incompetent, under Civil Code, § 5861, to testify as to the charge of adultery, made in the cross-libel.—Id.

(B) Parties and Persons Interested in Event.

§ 92 (Ga.) That a person was the propounder of a will, and was also named as executrix and as a legatee, did not disqualify her from testifying to the signing of the will by testator in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, under Civ. Code 1910, § 5858.—Brock v. Brock, 79 S. E. 473.

(C) Testimony of Parties or Persons Interested, for or against Representatives, Survivors, or Successors in Title or Interest of Persons Deceased or Incompetent.

§ 126 (Ga.App.) The provisions of Civ. Code 1910, § 5858, concerning the testimony of transactions with deceased persons, as adopted in 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 85), supersede the decisions of the Supreme Court rendered prior to 1889, construing the act of 1866 (Acts 1866, p. 134), and permit no exceptions to the rule.—Jarrard v. Hawes, 79 S. E. 373.

§ 128 (N.C.) Revisal 1905, § 1631, prohibiting a party in interest against the executor or administrator of a decedent as to a conversation or transaction with decedent, has no application to criminal cases, so as to prevent the state introducing evidence of a conversation between defendant and one whom he is charged with murdering.—State v. Shelton, 79 S. E. 883.

§ 149 (N.C.) In an action by a widow and heirs to recover land, involving delivery of a deed to decedent, Revisal 1905, § 1631, held not to require exclusion of widow's testimony that she saw decedent place the deed in his trunk; it not being against the personal representative of the deceased or any one claiming under him.—Carroll v. Smith, 79 S. E. 497.

§ 159 (N.C.) In an action by a widow and heirs to recover land involving delivery of a deed to decedent, Revisal 1905, § 1631, held not to exclude the widow's testimony that she saw decedent place the deed in a trunk; it not involving a communication or transaction with him.—Carroll v. Smith, 79 S. E. 497.

(D) Confidential Relations and Privileged Communications.

§ 191 (N.C.) Written directions by a husband just before his death to his wife, with reference to business matters, not intended to come into her hands until after his death, held admissible to prove suicide, and not a confidential communication under Revisal 1906, § 1636; the word "communicate" meaning to convey, to make known, as to communicate information.—Whitford v. North State Life Ins. Co., 79 S. E. 501.

§ 203 (W.Va.) Knowledge acquired by a witness under direction of a prosecuting attorney to use in the trial of indictments against legislators for bribery is not privileged, even on an examination before a joint legislative committee.—Sullivan v. Hill, 79 S. E. 670.

III. EXAMINATION.*(A) Taking Testimony in General.

§ 226 (N.C.) The mode of the examination of witnesses is within the sound discretion of the trial court.—State v. Cobb, 79 S. E. 419.

§ 240 (N.C.) The trial court may in its discretion exclude leading questions.—McKeel v. Holloman, 79 S. E. 445.

§ 245 (N.C.) Questions which were fully covered by previous answers of the witness were properly excluded.—In re Smith's Will, 79 S. E. 977.

§ 246 (Ga.App.) In a prosecution for a violation of the prohibition law it was error for the court to ask a witness whether he did not tell an officer that he had purchased intoxicating liquor at defendant's place, and why he had been used as a witness if he knew no more about the case than he had testified to, where the state had already examined such witness, and elicited nothing tending to incriminate defendant.—Murphy v. State, 79 S. E. 228.

§ 255 (Ga.App.) Testimony of a witness, based upon a memorandum made by himself or under his supervision and from which he had refreshed his recollection, held properly admitted, where the witness knew the memorandum was correct at the time it was made.—Rogers-McBorie Co. v. Robeson Cutlery Co., 79 S. E. 374.

§ 262 (N.C.) Permitting or refusing the recalling of witnesses for further examination on matters already gone into rests in the discretion of the trial court.—State v. Fogleman, 79 S. E. 879.

(B) Cross-Examination and Re-Examination.

§ 268 (Va.) In an action on certain notes given for the price of a sawmill, a question asked on cross-examination of one of the original parties to the transaction as to the amount of money he had to pay for the mill on the day it was advertised to be sold, where he got it, and what he did with it, held proper.—Davis v. Cole Bros., 79 S. E. 1033.

§ 274 (Ga.) Where, on a trial for murder, defendant put his character in issue, and a witness for defendant failed to qualify as a character witness on his direct examination, it was error, on cross-examination, to allow the state to introduce evidence of specific acts of defendant, tending to show that he was a man of violent character.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

§ 287 (S.C.) Where the part of a conversation testified to by a witness on cross-examination was not brought by any questions asked of the witness, and such conversation had previously been excluded, questions on redirect examination calling for the rest of the conversation were properly ruled out.—McLain v. Allen, 79 S. E. 1.

(C) Privilege of Witness.

§ 297 (S.C.) One liable to a prosecution for a criminal offense cannot be compelled to testify merely because the prosecuting officer may agree not to prosecute him.—City of Anderson v. Fant, 79 S. E. 641.

IV. CREDIBILITY, IMPEACHMENT, CONTRADICTION, AND CORROBORATION.*(A) In General.

§ 311 (Ga.App.) That the prosecutor has remained in the courtroom and heard the other testimony, after sequestration of the witnesses has been requested by defendant, may be considered by the jury in passing upon the credibility of the prosecutor's testimony.—Hudgins v. State, 79 S. E. 367.

§ 330 (Va.) In an action on notes, a question asked one of the original parties to the transaction whether he had not given one of the plaintiffs as collateral a note of witness' grandfather and whether the latter had not afterwards claimed it to be a forgery held admissible to lay a foundation for attacking the witness' credibility.—Davis v. Cole Bros., 79 S. E. 1033.

(B) Character and Conduct of Witness.

§ 355 (Ga.) A witness, who stated that he did not know the general character of accused, and that all he knew was personal, held not qualified to testify as a character witness.—Lynn v. State, 79 S. E. 29.

(C) Interest and Bias of Witness.

§ 367 (Ga.) Where an attorney testified for defendant in attachment, evidence was admissible to show that he represented other creditors of defendant, who might profit by his testimony.—Dale v. Christian, 79 S. E. 1127.

§ 369 (N.C.) In a personal injury action against a railroad company, it is proper for the plaintiff to show, by cross-examination of a witness for the defendant, that the company furnished the witness transportation to come to the trial, as a circumstance from which bias may be inferred.—Johnson v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 79 S. E. 690.
